DOMINION DAY.

Canada's natal day was celebrated with becoming enthusiasm by the people of Deseronto. The home attractions were the picnic in the Driving Park and the picnic given by the Independent Foresters and the Citizens' Band, of Deseronto, and grant two events.

Many also took themselves to Napanee to witness the elaborate celebration in that town. There were many who availed themselves of the holiday to take a trip on the bay, and there were numerous private and family picnics held in Glenora and other points along our beautiful bay.

The storm in the evening forbade outdoor sports, but mirth and happiness reigned in every home.

FORESTERS AND CITIZENS' BAND PICNIC. The picnic held under the auspices of the Foresters of Deseronto, and the Citizens' Band provided, notwithstanding so many other attractions, a very pleasant event.

VALDIR THE MONK.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.
CHAPTER VII.

In order to understand the circumstances under which Ruric was brought before the Emperor it will be necessary to go back a few hours. The Emperor had occasion to attend at the duel, and as he was some time in answering the summons he was questioned, when he did come, concerning his tardiness. His answer was, that he had been attending the Count Damoff.

"And what said the Count?" asked the Emperor. "He was well yesterday."

"Yes—but he met with an accident to-day."

"Look, Kapan," the young ruler cried, who saw in an instant that something unusual had happened, "think not to conceal anything from me. What is it now?"

"Sir, I meant not to hide anything from you. The Count has been engaged in a duel."

"He is—was he challenged?"

"No, sire—he was the challenger."

"So, no. And who was the other party?"

"A humble gun-maker, sire, named Ruric Nevel."

"The name is familiar."

"His father was a captain in the last war with the Turks. He arose from the ranks under Ruric, and was one of the bravest of the brave."

"Captain Nevel! Ah, yes. I remember now. He and Valdir were the two who first mounted the ramparts at Izium. So the old dispatches read."

"Yes, sire. Poor Nevel was shot a month afterwards while leading his brave company against the rebellion of Turkish infantry. Valdir came home and got a colonel's commission."

"And afterwards received a title," added Peter.

"Yes, sire."

"And this gun-maker is this captain's son?"

"Yes, sire."

"And methinks Valdir left a child."

"He did, sire—a daughter, who is now with Olga—she is his ward."

"Yes, yes. And the Count fought a duel with young Nevel, and got beaten, eh?"

"Before the surgeon could answer a page entered the chamber and announced that the Duke of Tula wished to see his imperial master."

The Emperor directed that he should be admitted; and ere long afterward the proud Duke entered the apartment. He was a tall, stout man, with light hair and blue eyes, and not far from the middle of life. His bearing was haughty, though he was forced to a show of respect now that he was before his master.

"Sire," spoke the Duke, after the usual salutations had passed, "I have come to demand justice at thy hands. My young friend, the Count Conrad Damoff, who is a nobleman, and as he furthermore proudly insulted a noble lady whom the Count held most dear, he could hardly help challenging him. The fellow accepted the challenge, and he succeeded, by the most cowardly maneuvering, in inflicting upon him a mortal wound."

"This is a serious affair," said the Emperor, who had not failed to note the astonished look of the surgeon while the Duke was telling his story.

"It is most serious, sire; and surely the ruffian should be at once executed."

"But did you not say that the Count challenged him?"

"I did, sire; but you must remember that he was an instigator of self-preservation with the noble Count. The fellow would have undoubtedly murdered him had he not taken this course."

"Was you present at the duel, my lord?"

"No, sire; but I have a friend without who was present."

"Then you may bring him in."

"The Duke departed, and when he returned Stephen Urzen bore him company."

"This is the man, sire," Olga said, as he led his companion forward.

He was a tall, stout man, with light hair and blue eyes, and not far from the middle of life. His bearing was haughty, though he was forced to a show of respect now that he was before his master.

"And how about the duel?" asked the Emperor.

In answer to this Urzen went on and related what he had prepared on the subject; and it need not be said that the report was about on a par with what we have already heard. He even went so far as to swear that the count had tried repeatedly to compromise matters after the combat had begun, but that he begged of Ruric to give up the battle; but that the latter, thirsting for the young nobleman's blood, kept hotly, madly at it!

It was at this juncture, and without referring to the surgeon, that the Emperor sent for Ruric; and having learned that a lieutenant of the Khitigor guard was present at the duel, he sent for him also.

Arise arrived first, and was present when Ruric came.

And now Ruric Nevel stood before the Emperor. Peter stood upon him for some moments, and then he said:

"Sir, thy bearing is bold."

"Why should it not be, sire, when I stand before one whom I honor and respect and do not fear?" So spoke Ruric calmly, and with peculiar dignity.

"No fear?" repeated the autocrat, sternly.

"No, sire. Peter of Russia is not a man to be feared by those who love and honor him."

"Innocence!" uttered the duke.

The Emperor looked up into his face, and he added:

"Now, sire, you can see for yourself some of his traits of character."

"Aye," returned Peter, "I see. They are wonderful. I know not that among my artisans there were men of such boldness."

The duke knew not how to interpret, and he muttered some words of praise.

"Now, sir," returned Peter, turning to the gunmaker, "how dared you strike a Russian nobleman?"

"I did not, sire. Conrad Damoff came to my shop, and he brought me a paper, in which I was required, or ordered, to relinquish all claims to the hand-off."

"Sire," interposed the duke, "he mistook."

"Never mind," broke in the Emperor, with an authoritative wave of the hand, "we will hear nothing of the lady here. Why did you strike the count?"

"Because, sire, he descended from his station and struck me. He threw away his sword, which would protect the nobleman, and struck me without provocation."

"And then you knocked him down?"

"I did, sire."

"And perhaps you would have done the same to me."

"Sire," answered the youth, quickly.

When Damoff tried by threats to make me sign his paper. I told him that there was but one man on earth at whose order I would do that thing. The man who has the right to command shall never have occasion to strike me."

There was something in this reply, and more in the tone and bearing of him who spoke it, that made the duke tremble. He saw plainly that the Emperor's eyes sparkled with admiration as they rested upon the gunmaker.

"But now about this duel," resumed the Emperor, "how dared you take advantage of the count in the conflict?"

"Advantage, sire," repeated the youth in surprise.

"Aye. Did he not, Stephen Urzen?"

"He did, sire," replied the man thus addressed.

"And which of the two do you call the best swordsman?" Peter asked.

"Why, sire—the count is or was, vastly his superior."

"And what say you, sir lieutenant?"

Muric trembled, for this was addressed to him, which would protect the nobleman, and struck me without provocation."

"Let Ruric Nevel be tried here before me. If I mistake not you have some good swordsmen near your palace. There is Demetrius the Greek."

"What—my Master-at-Arms?"

"Yes, sire. He is the best swordsman in my empire. I think our young adventurer would fare badly in his hands."

"Never mind, sire; you could judge."

"Why, said Peter, with a smile, "Demetrius handles the count as I would a mere child."

"Sire," spoke Ruric, modestly, but yet frankly, "it was surely no disgrace to be overcome by your tutor."

"And will you take a turn with him at the sword?"

"Yes, sire—if it so please you."

"By my soul," cried the Emperor, leaping up, "I will have some diversion out of this trial. What, be! I light up the sword here. Let every lamp be lighted, for we want sight now. Send Demetrius here—and let him bring his round-edged sword!"

Both the duke and Urzen stood aghast at this new turn, but they dared not interfere, for they saw that their imperial master was all excitement now to see a trial of skill at that science which, above all others, he tried to make his officers learn. But then they had one hope: Demetrius might overcome the gunmaker so easily that Peter should not see his real power.

Demetrius soon came, and under his arm he carried the sword. They were of the common size, but with round edges and points on purpose for play. The master-at-arms was a well-proportioned built man, and possessed a splendid form. He was a Greek by birth, and was now retained by the Emperor as a teacher of the sword exercise.

"Demetrius," said Peter, "I have sent for you to entertain us with a show of your skill. Here is a man about whose power there is some dispute. Mind you—it is all in kindness—Ruric Nevel, take your weapon."

The youth stepped forward and extended his hand for the other sword. It was taken warmly, for the Greek saw in an instant that he had a noble man to deal with. And those two men were not much unlike in form. Demetrius was an atom, the taller, but Ruric was of the same build.

The night had come on, but the great lamps were all lighted, and the room was as bright as day.

"Sir," said Ruric, addressing the Greek, "this is none of my seeking, though I will confess that I have a long while longed to cross a playful sword with you. I play well."

"Like you," the Greek returned, bluntly and kindly, "if you beat me I will not like you less. I can afford to be beat once, seeing that that I have never been since first I offered to fence."

"Come, come," cried Peter, who was impatient for the entertainment, "let's see the opening. Now, stand aside, gentlemen."

Like two tigers those swordsmen as their weapons crossed with a clear and ringing clang. The Greek led carefully, and Ruric as carefully waded every stroke. Then the former assumed a guard, and Ruric led off in turn. Ere long the swords clashed with sharper ring, and soon spats of fire flew out from the clanging steel. Louder and louder grew the clang, and quicker and quicker grew the strokes. The thrusts were made with skill and force, but as yet neither had been touched.

The Emperor was in ecstasy; He clasped his hands and shouted bravo with all his might.

By and by Ruric's eye grew more intense in its sparkling fire. His opponent wore it, but he could not tell what it meant. The youth was about to risk the most daring feat of all he knew. Steadily burned his eye, and his lips were set like steel. At length he saw that the Greek was playing for a thrust, and he lowered his point. Demetrius saw the chance and drawing his sword quickly back he made the thrust with all his power. He was sure now he had won, for there was no earthly way in which his point could be struck either down or up. But see! With a gliding motion—a motion almost imperceptible—Ruric raises his sword and catches the other's blade along upon its side, and the other point, instead of touching his breast, is caught in the cross-guard of his hilt. Then, quick as lightning, and with all his might, Ruric bends his elbow downward with the whole weight of his massive shoulder, and throws his wrist upward. On that instant the Greek sees and feels what meant that strange fire of the eye. He feels his point caught, but before he can close his grasp more firmly the hilt is wrenched from his hand—it strikes the vaulted ceiling with a dull clang—and, descending, is caught fairly on the hilt by Ruric Nevel!

For a moment all is still as death in that chamber. Ruric is the first to break the silence. He advances to the Greek, and, as he hands back the sword, he says:

"Demetrius, remember your promise. I know you are a brave man, for I can see it in your forgiving glance. You will not like me less for this."

"By heaven, no!" the noble Greek cried, dropping both the swords, and extending both hands, like the gunmaker grasped.

"I honor you—I love you."

Peter, Alexander, the impetuous Emperor—then in the zeal and fire of youth—leaped from his standing-place, and caught Ruric by the hand.

"By Saint Michael!" he cried, earnestly and loudly, "you stand clear of all blame, for full well do I know that, had you so desired, you could have slain Conrad Damoff at your first thrust."

"Sire," returned the youth, now speaking tremulously, "twice did I disarm the count, and yet spare him. And when, in my rage, I broke his weapon in twain to bring him to his senses, he seized a second sword."

"Duke," spoke the Emperor, turning towards Olga, who stood trembling with rage and mortification, "you see you must have labored under a mistake. You can retire now—not a word, sir!"

With a quivering lip and a trembling step the duke left the apartment; and after him went Peter Nevel.

"Now, Ruric Nevel, if you leave Moscow without my consent, you do so at your peril. I would not lose sight of you. You are at liberty."

In an hour Ruric was upon his mother's bosom. He told her all that had happened—all but the last words of the Emperor. He did not tell her those, for he knew not whether they boded him good or evil.

CHAPTER VIII.

It was about two weeks after the events last recorded that Rosalind Valdir sat in her own apartment with Zenobie for her companion. It was in the afternoon, and a severe storm was raging without.

"Now, Zenobie," spoke the beautiful maiden, "we have a moment alone—the first since morning. And now tell me about that black monk. What did he say his name was?"

"Valdir,"

"Ah, yes. I have heard his name; and if I mistake not he is a sort of mysterious being."

"He is, my mistress; and I am just as confident that I have seen him before as I am that I have seen you before."

"How? I seem before?"

"By where?"

"Ah," returned the young girl, with a dubious shake of the head, "there is the mystery. For the life of me I cannot tell. He knows me—he knows everybody—and yet he has been long in the city, if one might judge from his conversation."

"But what did he say to you? Where was it?" asked Rosalind, eagerly.

"Yes—and about Ruric Nevel."

"And what about us?" the maiden asked blushing.

"He asked me if I thought you loved the gun-maker. He was so kind—and he appeared so anxious to know—and then he seemed to take such an interest in Ruric that I could not refuse to answer him."

"But what did you tell him?"

"I told him you did love Ruric. I told him how you had been children together, and how you would now give your hand to him sooner than to the proudest noble in the land. He asked me some things about the duke, but I would not tell him that. When I spoke of it I told the truth, I will not speak of it to any person."

"You were right, Zenobie. You were very right—about this last part; but you should have told all you knew concerning Ruric and me."

"I should have told nothing wrong, Oh, I should be proud to acknowledge my love for such a man."

"Aye—and so I am, my little spirit. I love Ruric with my whole soul, and would be proud to give him my hand this day; but that is no reason why you should tell of it."

"Surely, my mistress, I meant no harm," the young girl cried, eagerly.

"Hush, Zenobie. I do not blame you. Only I would have you careful."

"And I would be careful. But, oh, you could not have resisted him. He drew it from me ere I knew it. He put his questions in such a strange manner that he could not speak without telling him what he wanted to know. He did not say, 'Does she love Ruric Nevel?' but he took it for granted that such was the case, and then ere I was aware of it he had made me say so. But surely do not mean you harm; nor does he mean harm to Ruric. He is a good man, I know."

"I wish I could see him," returned Rosalind, half to herself.

"You can not mistake him if you ever do see him, my mistress. He is a strange, looking man; and then he draws a sword from his coat, and he has found the officers. He dresses all in black—to-day it was in black velvet. But his shape is his most striking characteristic. He is the fattest man in Moscow. His belly hangs when he laughs, and his chin comes to sink clear out of sight. He would be a funny man, and would make me laugh, if he did not puzzle me so."

"And did he ask you about anything else?"

"No—only he asked me if I knew how the duke stood with the emperor; and I told him I thought he stood very well. Then he said he had heard that they had had some dispute concerning the duel between the Count Damoff and Ruric. But I told him I guessed that had resulted in no arrangement, for the duke was as much at court as ever. And after that he told me about the duke, as he was there and saw nearly the whole of the affair."

And Zenobie went on and told all that the monk related about Ruric's bravery; and Rosalind listened with a steady and eagerly. It was the theme that pleased her. The attendant saw how gracefully she recounted came upon the ears of her mistress, and she closed the recital with some opinions of her own wherein Ruric Nevel was held up as a pattern after which all men who wished to win the love of woman should be made.

Before any answer could be made by Rosalind the door of the apartment was opened, and the duke entered. He smiled, very kindly as he bowed to his ward, and then, with a wave of his hand, he motioned for Zenobie to withdraw; and after the attendant was gone he took a seat close by his fair charge. The maiden looked up at him with a steady and eagerly serious look there as yet, still she could plainly see that he had something of more than usual importance on his mind. She shuddered as she gazed upon him, for could not help it. There was something in the look of the man—a sort of hidden intent which came out in a tone and gleam in his eyes, and something which he had never spoken, but which was yet manifest, that moved her thus. What it was she could not tell. It was the prompting of that instinct of the human soul which may repel an object while yet the working mind detects no harm.

But she was not to remain in the dark much longer. The evil one was loose, and his bonds of restraint were cast off. He had marked his prey, and the meshes were gathering about it. "Rosalind," the duke said, in a tone which he meant should have been easy and frank, but which, nevertheless, was marked and deeply mysterious, "there is some talk among the courtiers now that Conrad Damoff may recover."

"Oh, I am glad of that," the fair girl uttered, eagerly.

"Yes—I suppose so," resumed Olga, eyeing her sharply. "But you have no particular care for him, I presume."

"Aye—it was of him I was speaking."

"No, sir. I care only for him as I care for all who need to become better ere they die."

"Aha—yes," said the duke, biting his lip, "and your mind he had the frankness to acknowledge that he was about as needy of virtue as was the count. 'But,' he resumed, with a faint smile, 'you never loved the man!'"

"No, sir," the maiden answered, gazing up into her guardian's face with an inquiring look.

"So I thought—so I thought." As Olga thus spoke he smiled again, and moved his chair near to Rosalind. "I am well aware," he resumed, "that your affections have not yet been occupied by one who is capable of making a proper companion for you, through all the ups and downs of life."

Rosalind's eyes dropped beneath the steady gaze of the speaker, and her frame trembled. But ere she could make any reply, he had moved on.

"My dear Rosalind, I have come now upon a business which I may justly call the most important of my life. I have not approached this subject lightly, nor with over zeal; but I have come to it through careful consideration and anxious study."

Here the duke stopped and gazed into Rosalind's face. She met his gaze and her eyes dropped again. She trembled more than before, and a dim, dreadful fear worked its way to her heart. Her mind was in a state of confusion, and she could not think of anything but the duke's words.

"Rosalind," the nobleman continued, "when I was but nineteen years of age I was married with a girl whom I loved. She lived with me four short happy years. In that time we were blessed with two children, but they lived not long to cheer us. And then my beautiful wife died, and the world was dark and drear to me. I thought I should never love again. Time passed on, and you were placed in my charge. When you first came I loved you, and I loved her if you were to take the place of the children I had lost. But you grew quickly up. Your mind was expanded, and your heart was large. I found that I could not make a child of you; and then I set down all alone and asked myself what place it was you assumed in my heart. Can you guess the answer, Rosalind?"

"As a little child," answered the maiden, trembling violently.

"No, no, sweet one. I pondered and I studied, and I examined myself carefully; and I found that the memory of my departed wife was fast fading away before the rising of another just as pure and holy. Now do you understand?"

"No, no, no," the maiden uttered in a frightened whisper.

"Then listen further," continued the nobleman in a low, earnest tone, and with a strange fire in his deep blue eyes. "As your charms of both mind and person were gradually developed I came to look upon you with new feelings, or, I should say, with the old feeling more fully developed. I looked around me. I saw my surroundings, pale without a legitimate love. In my parties I had no companions to assist and guide me, and in my loneliness I had no mate to cheer and enliven me. I wished not that such should be the case. At length my eyes were opened, and I saw plainly the spirit that was moving upon my soul. I loved you, and I knew that I had found the woman who was to give me joy once more. Rosalind, I love you truly, fondly; and I would make you my wife. Now you cannot fail to understand me—can you?"

Rosalind gazed up into the face of her guardian and she was pale as death.

"You do not mean—oh!"

"I mean to do so," he said, and the fair girl clasped her hands towards the man before her.

"Hold," he said, almost sternly. "I am not trifling now. I am not only serious, but firm in purpose. When we were placed under my charge your father bade me do as I would; and now I must make you my wife. The Count Damoff was the first who came for your hand, and had he been a proper man, and had you loved him, I should have interposed no objections; but you did not love him, and that affair is past. Now I lay my claim upon you, and my fortune and title I lay at your feet."

"And what is to become of my estate?" the maiden asked, and meaningfully, for the thought flashed upon her.

"Why—the two have united," returned the duke, with some hesitation.

"No, no," Rosalind cried; "you will not do this. Oh, spare me from such a fate!"

"Spare thee, girl? Spare thee from becoming the wife of one of the most powerful noblemen in the empire? You must be careful."

"My guardian," spoke the fair girl, now looking her companion steadily in the face, "you only do this to try me. When you know that such a union would make me miserable forever—when you know it would cut out all the joys of life, and extinguish the last hope of recovery from my soul, you will not press it."

"Rosalind Valdir, I have resolved that you should be my wife. Mind you, this is one of the firm, fixed purposes of my soul; and those who know the Duke of Tula best know that he never gives up a purpose once fixed in his mind. You cannot mistake me now."

Slowly the stern face dawned upon Rosalind's mind. There had been a lingering hope that he might be only trying her to see if she loved him, or if she would willingly become his wife. Awhile she remained with her head bowed, and as he spoke but at length she looked up and spoke.

"Sir," she said, faintly, but with marked decision, "you can not make me your wife."

"Aha!—and why not?"

"Because I will never consent."

"Aha—say you so?"

"I do, and I mean it."

"But, my lady, you know little of my power if you think you can thwart me in my purpose. I tell thee, as sure as the God of heaven lives, you shall be my wife."

"No, no. Before heaven I protest against such unholy union. You can not have my heart, and such union would be but foul mockery."

"Oh—now you come to the point. I can't have your heart, eh? Perhaps your heart is given to the gun-maker?"

Rosalind's eyes flashed in an instant. The words of the duke were spoken sneeringly and contemptuously, and they jarred upon the young girl's soul.

"Aye," she quickly uttered, and boldly, too, "I do love Ruric Nevel; and he is worthy of my love."

"Now, my pretty ward," resumed Olga, in a tone of peculiar irony, "you have spoken as I hoped you would speak—plainly and to the point; so I can answer just as plainly. Know, then, that Ruric Nevel can never be your husband. He stands charged with a horrid crime, and the Emperor only waits to see whether the count recovers or not, before he is capable of punishment. The gun-maker is forbidden, on pain of death, to leave the city. So you may cast him from your thoughts as soon as possible."

"What crime is Ruric accused of?" the maiden asked.

"Of murder."

"In wounding the count?"

"Yes."

"Oh, how can you bring your tongue to such speech? You know the noble youth was not to blame in this affair. He was—"

"Hold, Rosalind. I want no argument on this question. You have heard what I have said, and be assured that I mean it. I had hoped you would receive my proposal with more favor; but I did not enter into my plan until my mind was all made up, and the thing all fixed. You will become my wife within one month."

"I will flee to the Emperor," gasped Rosalind.

"You will not leave this palace again until you are the Duchess of Tula."

"I will never speak the word that is necessary to make me your wife—never! At least, if you be by my side, my lips shall be sealed, and no power on earth shall loose them."

"Do you mean this?" whispered the duke.

"As God lives, I do."

"Then mark me

The paper has a slightly textured appearance with some minor creases and discoloration, characteristic of old paper. The left edge of the page is bound, showing the inner hinge and some stitching. The overall tone is warm and slightly yellowed, suggesting age.

A Horse's Big Swim.

The toughest two miles that any horse in New Haven ever covered, fell to the lot of a big bay yesterday morning as a result of his own indiscretion. It was two miles straight away across the harbor. From the end of Long Wharf to the east Haven shore. That is a long swim for anything of the horse family, unless perhaps the hippopotamus, and the remarkable performance was watched by hundreds of people, who cheered loudly at his successful conclusion. The animal belonged to the late Charles L. Sturges, and was one of a handsome pair worth over $500. They were harnessed to a heavy truck, and their driver, Lew Woods, was taking them down to the end of Long Wharf to get a load of merchandise. Near the shore end of the wharf the bit of the off horse was broken. He took fright, immediately dragged his mate along the wharf at a mad gallop. Dozens of loaded wagons were standing in the most frightened horses, and the excitement among the teamsters, who expected their own horses to join in the race or suffer by collision with Sturges's team, caused a commotion for which Woods's safety, needed to make the scene exceedingly lively.

Driver Woods hung to the reins and either by accident or good luck, started a team-clear of everything. He hoped that they would stop at the end of the wharf, but they gave no sign of such an intention, and just at the last moment he jumped. He struck on his feet and was not hurt, but the team, without checking their speed for an instant, dashed clear of the wharf and disappeared in fifteen feet of water. There was no sign of the truck or the near horse, but about a minute the animal that had caused the trouble, reappeared on the surface, entirely clear of the truck and struck out for the other shore, two miles away. Longtime man John Taylor took him from the steamer Elms City jumped into a row-boat and pursued the swimmer. Three hours later, but almost at once, he found the boat. There was nothing to do but to follow along and render assistance if it became possible.

Meanwhile John Angus, with a fast team, started around the shore to meet the horse if he ever reached the other bank. Angus carried blankets and stimulating drugs to revive the horse, which was naturally much exhausted after his swim. The horse, watched by a great crowd, swam steadily through the deep water and showed little signs of weariness. But about a quarter of a mile from the shore he struck shoal water and a muddy bottom. Here he floundered and sank, and the untimely helplessness of this time repentant, was helped over the shoals.

A few rods further along he struck some mud and sank again, where he was turned over on his back. It was a delicate operation to right him, for his hoofs beat the water into foam, but Taylor and his companions were equal to the task, and the bay was once more set on an even keel.

Near the shore there is a ledge with slippery, sloping sides, and here the bay got into trouble again. He tried to get a footing but slid off and sank in the deep water. Again he was rescued and started toward the shore. Fortunately but a narrow strip of water now lay before the tired animal, and in a few minutes he struck hard bottom and walked ashore, while a great cheer went up from the crowd.

Angus was ready to meet him with a warm blanket and the drinks. The former was accepted with dumb thanks, but the drinks were respectfully though firmly declined. The horse was tired, except over the eyes and his injuries were not serious—New Haven News.

Back to Her Side.

An old, dilapidated private schooner or cutter was coming through the harbor on the morning of the 22nd inst. As it came nearer in its slow course across the plain lake the horses were thin and emaciated, and the driver, who sat on a rough board seat beneath the faded and torn canvas cover, was as woe-begone as they.

He had once been a good looking man, but his face and features, which had once been well the story of sorrow and disappointment.

"How far is it to the next town?" he asked as he came opposite to me.

"About twelve miles," I replied.

"How is the road? Can get there before night?"

"The clouds were skimming across the sky and a storm seemed riding on the back of the north wind that blew fiercely over the prairie."

"Guess I'll go on, though," he ejaculated after having considered a moment. Then he lighted from the wagon and commenced facing a broken pair of the harness with some cord he drew from the wagon box.

"What's your hurry? Where are you bound for?"

"I'm going to Smith county," he replied, wearily, as he thought of the long trip, almost to the foot of the Rockies, "I must get there before the first of July."

"Why, got some land there?"

"No, not exactly, but something better. I lived there two years ago. Mary and I. The hot winds came and the times grew hard for us. We worked night and day, but there wasn't no use—the sun just dried up the ground and we almost give up. Then Mary died and she was my wife, you know," he said, in half apologetic words. "She helped all she could, but her strength wouldn't hold out."

"And you were left alone?"

"Yes, so much alone that I buried her all by myself on our little claim out to try and make a living. I lost my right to the claim, he went on wearily after a pause, "but I didn't care much, except that she was there. Now I must go through and see to it."

"Do you expect to get it back?"

"Not all of it I don't want it. But they tell me the land is being plowed up in that neighborhood, and I'm afraid they'll plow over her grave."

"And so you'll bury the land?"

"A little of it that holds her. I kin make a living I know, and I'll stay by her side till the end. It seemed like the sun went out when she left me there."

He related all my efforts to induce him to remain for the night. He must hurry, he said.

And the last I saw of him he was urging the tired horses towards the angry sunset sky so eager to reach the grave of the one he loved so well.

Humble in station though he was, crude though his surroundings, his lonely vigil on the far western prairie with his wide spreading sea of grass around and only the tiny, mound of earth to attract his lonely heart, has often seemed a picture worthy of a true artist's touch.—Detroit Free Press.

On Probation. That she has told him to depart. His broken heart betrays. Yet she is apt to mend his heart. If he will mend his ways.

But she didn't. I pleaded long and whispered "yes." Which she took with a will, but oh, I wish to know her name I'd like. If she'd only speak to me!

BREAKFAST PICTURES.

Two Views of What the Day's First Meal Should Be.

The Richardsons are well to do people who live up town near Madison avenue. Their everyday table is, to say the least, queer. I know, for I was invited guest one week and sugar. I have never seen a breakfast so oranges and sugar since. But the breakfast was especially a lasting impression on my mind, and I have never wanted out of a breakfast since. Even the desire to be polite could not induce me to eat a meal. Then there were chops and slices of bread. The chops were accurate. Chops averaged one apiece, and one over. I saw of bread, "Frank," said Hamlin, "I have never seen a breakfast so hungry to church."

"Why," said Frank, "can't I have all the bread I want?"

But he couldn't, and, like myself, went hungry to church.

This is a fact, not fiction.

Breakfast is the meal that suffers most from indigestion, and it is a fact, not fiction, that many a man who suffers from indigestion, and who is in the habit of eating a substantial meal that contains an element of indigestion.

Mrs. Plummer, a charming young married woman, told me with tears in her eyes, that she had spoken her first cross word to her dear Tom, who was a very good man, and the honeymoon was dimmed and life was dreary. Tom had said that the breakfasts might as well be married with a pretty red dress only it for a boarding house, and he was heartless, but his wife did a brave and good thing. She determined to make a study of the breakfast table. She looked up the boarding house keeper. So we talked it over and together made a few purchases.

The next morning when Tom came down to breakfast the table presented an inviting appearance. It was covered with a pretty red cloth. At each place was a fruit plate, covered with a red napkin, and finger bowl. On one side of the plate was a saucer and spoon, on the other the white napkin, knife, fork, salt bottle and butter plate. In the centre of the table was a basket of Newtown pippins, grapes and bananas. Tom looked up and said: "I was soon in the middle of a crisp, melting apple, giving small pieces delicately pared to his wife."

"How do you eat these things?" said Tom, holding up a grape fruit as big as a baby's head.

"Cut through the middle, across the sections and give me one half."

"Now look," said Mrs. Plummer, dexterously removed the pulp with a spoon into the saucer.

"You must not get a seed or any of the white part of the rind into your mouth. They are very bitter," continued Mrs. Plummer.

"We will have raw apples and grape fruit or oranges every morning, Tom."

The grape fruit is a compromise between a lemon and orange and deserves to be a universal favorite.

Tom liked it. After cleaning their fingers and wiping them on the napkin, the fruit dish, apple parings and all were removed.

Tom took up his morning paper to hide the frown of disgust which the thought of half sown oatmeal had invoked. The girl entered with a dish of "rolled wheat" and a red glass pitcher of cream. "Only the tops of two bottles," exclaimed Mrs. Plummer.

"The rest of the milk is just as good for cooking." This the way Mrs. Plummer prepared her wheat. A baked bean pot, as it was called, had been purchased on the previous day. At 3 in the afternoon she put two cups of wheat mixed with one teaspoon of salt and a quart and a pint of boiling water into the pot.

"Only two and a half cups for all this?" Tom asked. "The last course of this breakfast was a small rolled omelet, cooked for one minute on the griddle in the fat of bacon. Four eggs well whipped, a little salt and one-third of a cup of milk, composed this dish, which would have been far less savory cooked in the usual way as a large fat omelet."

Tom ate his wheat, drank his coffee, then got straight to Milly, took her in his arms, kissed her, and said:

"I'm sorry I was cross to you yesterday. You are a first rate housekeeper, and the dearest little," etc.

I knew the next time I saw Mrs. Plummer that love had returned.

A favorite dish of the Plummer is fish hash. It is prepared by soaking the fish over night, boiling it in the morning with two cups of milk, and cooking it in the water. The water is then drained off, butter, a tiny pinch of summer savory and a few drops of Worcester's sauce are added. It is then packed in a frying pan with best drippings and browned on the range.

Mrs. Plummer bought a dozen earthen shells and baked her eggs for breakfast. This is her rule: "Drop an egg into the shell or saucer, sprinkle a little salt and cover with a few finely grated bread crumbs. Bake for five minutes in the middle and bake ten minutes in a meat pan with a little water in it."

Oysters and the meat of lobsters can be cooked in these shells. Use a teaspoon of oyster liquor with the oysters and a tablespoon of milk with lobster. Let the covering of bread crumbs be thicker than for eggs.

Once a week Mrs. Plummer has griddle cakes, tender and light, made of sour milk, soda, with butter and sugar. She gets her maple syrup in gallon cans. Tom thinks them a sufficient hearty breakfast without meat, after the fruit and wheat course.

One day Mrs. Plummer had ham and eggs, nor fried potatoes for breakfast nowadays," said Tom after several weeks. "There is not the faintest shadow of a breakfast breakfast about you. You don't even have steaks, nor lamb on toast," added he enthusiastically.

"Whitebread is left over we eat for lunch when you are not at home. Tom," was the answer.—Ex.

Mrs. Winslow Withnorp Blueblood—"Show me something in gloves, please; something suitable for evening wear."

Miss Mame Chawgum (sneakily at glove counter)—"Oh, something for evening wear, did you say, lady? How would you like these?"

Mrs. Blueblood—"They seem hardly suitable for evening wear, and."

Miss Chawgum—"My pardon, ma'am, but I have a pair just like them and I wear mine to parties and balls and receptions of all kinds and I can assure you that they are just the wiper for evening wear."

A Fact

WORTH knowing is that blood disease which all other remedies fail to cure, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Fresh confirmation of this statement is to be had daily. Even such deep-seated and stubborn complaints as Rheumatism, Gout, and the like, are thoroughly eradicated by the use of this wonderful alternative.

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatism, being able to walk only with great difficulty, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw by an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after suffering by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months. I am pleased to say that it effected a complete cure, and that I have since had no return of the disease."

"Mrs. L. A. Stark, Nashua, N. H., writes: 'One year ago I was taken ill with rheumatism, being confined to my house six months. I came out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine.'"

"I have taken a great deal of medicine, but nothing has done me so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I felt its beneficial effects before I had finished one bottle, and I can testify that it is the best blood medicine I know of."—L. W. Ward, Sr., Woodland, Texas.

To the Editor of THE TRIBUNE.

On your last week's issue you gave the daily record of a family of swine, and I have been thinking of the place of swine in the show the value of good breeding but when you ask if it can be better than that of man, you help me to see that swine are not saters from the same stock, hyfers from the same bill. I have a pure bred Berkshire of the name of "Old" and he milks daily, on ordinary feed. If this better were fed for a record all the world would be the wiser.

One day I have also a number of Durham grade hogs, not one of white, some go over forty on June grass pasture only. I do not wish to depreciate in any way the value of the Berkshire, but Ayreshires and Holsteins, and far more would keep in mind the fact that the family of each breed than in the breed itself they would by the use of the same feed.

It is not to be expected to increase their milk product. At the same time my observation convinces me of the great educational Commission which, after pointing out the desirable qualities of the various breeds, should equal the best of the stock of our country. There is nothing in the hands of man to equal the worth of the

The Hon. the Attorney General, the Governor General, might see his way to liberate the prisoners or at least to shorten their sentences, and the Minister of Justice has promised to look carefully into the case.

CATARHAL DEAFNESS—HAY FEVER

Serious Accident.

Mr. Wm. Stewart, Jr., was the victim of a very serious accident on Sunday, June 29th. With a number of companions he had sailed over to Grassy Point for a day's outing. Shortly after arrival he attempted to turn a hand-spring, and in doing so a dirk-knife which he wore attached to a belt fell from its sheath to the ground, handle down, and the whole weight of his body coming on the knife its blade penetrated the lower part of his body, causing a painful wound. His comprofusely all the way. Dr. Vandervoort dressed the wound, which was found to be of a dangerous character. The young man has suffered a great deal, but we learn electric storm set in and continued with some intermissions until 4 a. m. The lightning was very vivid and the rolls of thunder impressive. There were many heavy showers of rain. In this vicinity little damage was done though several persons were slightly effected by the lightning. The bay was very stormy for several hours. The storm was more violent elsewhere in Havings and also in Prince Edward and much damage is reported. A large number of lans were struck and lightning and destroyed trees were uprooted and great damage resulted to crops and fruit. Many persons were struck by the electric fluid and temporarily prostrated. A Campbellford great destruction was caused, half-tonnes falling and breaking glass. Culverts were washed out and the roots of Henderson's farm and the Woolen Company's mill blown off. In Deseronto and the other towns the telephone and telegraphic systems were greatly demoralized by the storm.

DECEIVING THE EYES.

OPTICAL ILLUSIONS THAT STARTLE
THE BEHOLDER.

The Looming Mirage and Fata Morgana—Reproduced in the Heavens with Great Magnitude, and Sailing Apparently up and Down—Remarkable Occurrences.

This wonderful phenomenon, says J. K.
Bloomfield in the New York Observer, takes several forms, according to the state of the atmosphere, but those most generally seen are the looming mirages of the Fata Morgana.
In looming mirages distant objects show an extravagant increase in vertical height without alteration in breadth. Distant hummocks of ice thus magnified into immense towers and pinnacles, and a ship is sometimes abnormally drawn out until it appears twelve or thirteen times as high as it is long. Rocks are seen drawn up to ten or twelve times their proper height. Houses, as well as human beings and animals, appear in like exaggerated shape.

Another form of mirage is when a ship, or some other object near the water, seems greatly enlarged, and a second inverted image meets it from above. Sometimes the proper image of the object is elevated far above the lake or sea, while the second image strange apparition inverted beneath it, the whole surrounded by a sheet of sky, which is mirrored and repeated within it.

In 1822, in the Arctic region, Capt. Scoresby by recognized, by its inverted image in the air, the ship Fame, which afterward proved to be seventeen miles beyond the visible horizon of his observation.

Dr. Vince, Aug. 7, 1805, at 6 p. m., saw from Ramsgate, at which place only the tops of Dover castle towers are usually visible, the whole of the castle. It appeared as if though lifted up and bodily placed on the near side of the intervening hill. So perfect was this illusion that the hill itself actually could not be seen through the figure.

Some forms of mirage are lateral as well as vertical, arising from unequal density of two contiguous inverted bodies of air. Thus, on Lake Geneva, a boat has been seen double the two images some distance apart. Persons have been duplicated in the same way. Any one on a hot day, by placing his eye near to a heated wall, may see lateral mirages of objects at a distance, and nearly on a line with the wall.

Upon the shores of Lake Ontario many beautiful and wonderful mirages are witnessed. The lake is so wide the opposite side is not at all visible. And yet during some peculiar states of the atmosphere it is clearly outlined. A gentleman witnessed a most perfect mirage from Sheldon's point, Oswego.
It was about 1 o'clock in the afternoon, when a splendid view of the Canadian shore was given. It extended from a point nearly opposite Oswego city to Cape Vincent, at points on the Jefferson county shore. Whole blocks of the city of Kingston were visible and localities distinctly defined. From Sack-ett's Harbor to Point Peninsula, ten miles distant, has appeared more than two or three miles away, and so plainly in view that the limbs of trees were visible. Stony island stood out plainly in view, and far beyond it could be seen Gallop and Duck island.
Even the Canada shore in the vicinity of Long point and Prince Edward's bay was at times plainly in sight.

A vessel has been seen sailing along the horizon with the hull uppermost, visible at Lake Huron. Accompanying the appearance of the ship was that of mountains and hills as though the Canadian shore was coming into view. A puff of wind apparently caused the whole phantasmagoria to melt away as if by magic.

In Syracuse, a distant city, a remarkable mirage was witnessed by many persons.
It lasted two hours, and was best observed from University hill looking northwest over Onondaga lake. Lake Ontario was plainly visible, and at a distance out at an angle of twenty-five degrees of the horizon, it looked like an ocean. Prof. Comfort says that a few years previous a similar mirage occured, and it was so distinct that by means of a glass he could discern a town, probably Kingston.

Portions of Rochester and sections of the country to the south of it have been seen out in the lake six and ten miles distant, as though the city was standing erect in the air. Trains of moving cars and other objects were distinctly defined, the aerial phantom continuing for nearly an hour.

A well-known lake captain has also witnessed a wonderful mirage, occurring on Lake Ontario. While on his way from the St. Lawrence up the lake and near the islands known as the False Ducks, and while standing at the city of Rochester, and by the view of the city of Rochester, thirty-two miles distant, with the gas-lights in the streets and all the appearances of a town lighted up would present themselves in the immediate vicinity at night.
The light-house at Oswego, as well as others on the lake shore below as far as Sackett's Harbor, were distinctly seen.
The mirage, and the objects were right indeed. It lasted for several minutes, then slowly faded away into darkness.

At Rochester, which is about twenty miles inland from Lake Ontario, a mirage of a most surprising character was witnessed by many. The entire northern sky as far as the eye could reach was lighted up by the landmark with the blue waters of Lake Ontario, while reflecting from her bosom could be seen the mountains, hills, valleys, bays, and rivers of the Canada shore inland for miles.
The coast could be plainly seen mirrored over a stretch of fifty miles, and so perfect at one time that the eye was deceived into believing that the reader can form some idea of its grandeur by knowing that a country separated from Rochester by a lake seven miles in width was as if suddenly by the hand of Maine street, or any land between the city and the lake.

Upon land, mirages are best seen over desert places in hot climates. The intense heat of the sands greatly rarifies the air in contact with them, and rays of light coming from the distant objects are gradually bent by approaching the strata stratum until they strike at an angle greater than the limiting angle. Total reflection occurs, the rays of light are sent acting as a mirror, or a body of water in which inverted images are seen.
This is presented to the inexperienced traveler over the desert plain the appearance of tranquil lakes, and, parched with thirst, he is easily deluded by them.

TYENDINGA PARK RESERVE.

From Our Own Correspondent.
The Methodist Sunday School from Wallbridge, township of Sidney, came down on the Varuna, and picnicked in the Parsonage grove. They were accompanied by two ministers.

We should like to see reports to the Mission board house to raise money for which a picnic was held in Edmund Loft's grove on the 4th of June; six of the boys during the vacation, complaints have been made against the men who bathe at the grain dock on Sunday mornings, as people go to Church. Officers of the law have promised to arrest future transgressors.

Peter Hill has accepted a position at Bay View Heights and moved his family to one of the cottages on that model farm. He readily found a tenant for his town house.

The friends made by our people to provide a good supper for the Foresters on Dominion Day were not appreciated, many seeking to a corner for their lunch, rather than pay a quarter for a good square meal, and help the cause.

The speeches in the Parsonage grove on Dominion Day were good, the dinner—first class, visitors—, and the games well contested.

Your correspondent enjoyed a plate of new potatoes, at the hospitable table of Joseph Picard and wife on Sunday last.

Brant Brant, who has for several months been ill with consumption, died on Sunday morning and was buried at Christ Church Cemetery on Monday afternoon.

Mrs. Keefe, who has been at the "Pines" for some days, attended services at both the churches on the Reserve, on Sunday last.

It is announced by the Toronto Globe that the Bay of Quinte six nations Mohawks hold a grand council in Tyndinaga, in August.

Wampum treaties, six nations from Grand River, seven nations from Lower Canada, and a coronet band from Onondaga, N.Y., are the attractions to draw a crowd. This may be a "pow wow" affair as the majority of the Mohawks of Tyndinaga are civilized and discontinue returning to the Pagan customs of their ancestors.

ST. MARK'S CHURCH NOTES.

Posters inform us of a moonlight excursion this Friday evening to Dava's Island, leaving dock at 7.30. It is in connection with St. Mark's Church. It is understood that with land in the supply sweet strains of music, weather permitting. This outing will prove no doubt a very attractive, pleasant and successful one.

The Rectory will be absent next Sunday, paying a Rial-di-accial visit to North Hastings.

The question beginning to agitate the members of the Sunday school is when will the annual picnic be held and where?

Next Sunday will be the sixth after Trinity. The 10th of July will consist of a brief sketch of the origin of the book of common prayer, while the subject treated in the evening will be the repentance of King David.

Despite the intense heat of the past few Sundays St. Mark's Church, owing doubtless to the weather, has proved itself a fully cooled one. The congregation is a highly favored one in this respect.

GIVE THE ST. LAWRENCE.

We give a few extracts from a letter written from Montreal by one of the junior members of Mr. Deane party now making a trip to the St. Lawrence. "We arrive here about 4.50 p.m. (Tuesday) and leave for Quebec tomorrow at 6 p.m. We ran all the rapids except the "Lachine" and we did not go down them because there was a terrible wind storm which blew all the chairs upside down, and made the boat roll quite a bit. But this was no reason for our not going when we came to the "Long Sault" rapids were quite high, and as they struck the boat, they bounced up and wet the people that were on board. The boat was a little larger rapids were the "Gedara" they are very beautiful but not so long as the "Long Sault" rapids. We were greatly taken with the rocks such as he described. When we landed at Montreal Valley and I went up street to look for the Q. P. R. Telegraph office. We only went to see a supper was being ready and it would not do to lose that. After supper we found the office on St. Sacre. The party also went down town to get some fruit and see an "Ocean" steamer. When we went up town we did not see any double cabs with horses, so I am afraid it will be pretty hard to get a cab. We squeezed six of us to get in one carriage. We went to the Windsor to-morrow, and then to the city. At the dock it is the dirtiest hole of mud we have ever seen. I was ever at..... We were sorry when we heard we were not going down the "Lachine" rapids. We were greatly taken with the rapids. When we landed at Montreal Valley and I went up street to look for the Q. P. R. Terra Cotta Protection for Wooden Buildings
A very interesting and trying test of hard porous terra cotta fire-proofing material was recently made at the Terra Cotta Works, Deseronto. A small building was erected, the frame and floor beams being 2x4 studs. These were lined with matched lumber and the roof and walls were lined with one-half inch terra cotta tiles which were fastened to the board walls, ceiling and floor with nails and washers. A single coat of plaster was then applied. After drying, three quarters of a cord of pine wood was placed inside almost filling the room. Upon this were piled two gallons of coal and one gallon of tar, and the mass was then fired. A strong wind blew from the west and the flames were poured out of the chimney. It burned for two hours before any sign of ill effect was noticed in the woodwork, but finally the nails which serve to fasten the terra cotta to the outer wall, owing to the insufficient protection of the thin coat of plaster, became red hot and charred the wood so that the hold of the nails were loosened and the material dropped off. It was then found that where the nails were fastened the thin slabs of terra cotta to wood two coats of plaster should be applied, and that by this means the protection of wooden buildings was made almost proof against fire from within the room or building so protected.

Disinfectants.

Dr. J. Clarke, of Peterborough, writing to the Editor of the Townsman, says: "In answer to enquiries as to the best disinfectants for use during summer I would again say that one of the safest, cheapest and most effective is ordinary household sulphate of copper dissolved in the proportion of two pounds to a pailful of water. This should be freely sprinkled every three or four weeks on a liberal use of this material. This around yards and premises will keep down many of those minor varieties of disease which are distinctly due to syphilitic influence as well as those more serious forms which prostrate the system and endanger life."

AN OLD VETERAN GONE.

On Friday, 4th inst., the remains of the Rev. William Young, of Trenton, father of Rev. W. J. Young of Olessee, were laid to rest in the cemetery where he had spent all of his long life in his native city. He had seen with patriotic pride her growth and development from weakness and poverty to present position among the nations. He did much to make happiness, and ways was a "Canadian of Canadians." He died within a short distance of the place where he was born. There the country was little better than a forest wilderness, but marvelous have been the changes which he saw in his long life of over eighty years. He was one of the early band of pioneer missionaries who, amidst many dangers and much privation, carried the gospel and civilization into the wild west. In other way could the hardy settlers have survived it. Several years ago, through the efforts of the church, which had been one of the temples of the faith, the settlement of Trenton, near his birthplace, there, surrounded by several of his sons, he spent his last days. He left behind him one daughter and six sons, and at his bedside one he passed away.

EDUCATION IN HASTINGS.

comfortable and suitable school house is in course of erection.

In South Hastings, the only High School to be opened in the State, the year is commencing and progressive town of Deseronto—though there are two excellent schools in the town—has been the scene of a magnificent brick building with four large and commodious class rooms, a gymnasium, a large hall, a modern improvement, wash rooms, cloak rooms, a modern improvement, a large hall for entertainments, lectures, etc. The rooms are supplied with desks and seats, one for each pupil, and a large lecture hall with room supplied with all the necessary apparatus. The building is situated in the heart of the town, by the water front, and covers three acres. The regular attendance is now over 500, and there is every prospect of an increase of the town, by the opening of the school in charge of two excellent teachers, Mr. Knight, the Head Master, having a previous experience of 15 years, and Mr. Macdonald, an accomplished High School teacher.

The Public School of Deseronto stands on a beautiful site, overlooking the town, and in 7 to 8 years ago, when I first visited the school, there was one teacher, in a very unsuitable building. The school has been an excellent state for several years. The Head Master is careful about the discipline of the whole school, and has assisted in everything pertaining to the same, by every efficient staff of assistants. The trustees are always anxious and willing to secure the best teaching, and the school has been a very successful thing necessary for the proper teaching of all the classes. Since the High School opened, the trustees have been very successful in taking up in teaching the subjects of the Fourth Class, and in preparing the pupils for admission to the High School.

The Public School of Deseronto, with its necessary desks and school furniture—but not a single desk or chair, and a building that should be furnished with more suitable seats and desks, and, in a few sections, the present school houses should be repaired, and made more comfortable for the children attending.

Some of our schools are in charge of young men and women who are sufficiently intelligent to teach, but they have no salary and even a second class certificate, who are deficient in many of the other requisites that should be required of a teacher. The great fault with many of these, and with some of more mature years and of greater experience, is the lack of thoroughness in teaching the school. They are also wanting in energy and fail to develop thought in their pupils and do not encourage in the pupils habits of industry, and thoroughness in teaching the school. I test their pupils by frequent and rapid drills on the subjects taught.

Our best teachers do not visit but Friday and Saturday, and their classes, but teach every lesson thoughtfully and thoroughly, and have frequent and rapid tests. I am glad that the great majority of the teachers are intelligent, and in every other way, I have urged the necessity of thoughtful and thoroughness in teaching the school, and live teachers always do well at inspection are more intelligent and thoughtful, and stand higher at promotion and entrance examinations.

The progress of many of the schools was retarded by the prevalence of a gripe in January, and more lately by influenza. In the future, I am glad to be as efficient as could be desired, I am glad to be able to report that, with few exceptions, the schools of South Hastings are making progress, and the progress of the schools is nearly all the teachers are thoughtful, earnest and industrious, and are working hard to make their schools more efficient.

I must again thank the people of South Hastings for the many acts of kindness and thoughtfulness to secure my return, and during the 19 years I have been discharging my duty in looking after the education of their children.

I must again thank you for your attention and for the kind and hearty support you have always given me, I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

JOHN JOHNSON,
Inspector.

THE TWELFTH OF JULY AT PICTON.

The weather on Saturday was superb thus favoring the proper celebration of the "glorious twelfth" by the Orangemen of Canada, and the various demonstrations throughout the country appear to have been invariably successful. The greater number of lodges of East Hastings attended the celebration at Roslin, but the Orangemen of Deseronto, Shannonville and Tyendinaga proceeded to Picton to assist their brethren of Prince Edward at the demonstration in that pretty town. At 9:30 a.m. The Tribune representative boarded the good steamer Ella Ross which had just arrived at the dock, Deseronto, with the wives, sweethearts and other friends. After a pleasant trip enlivened by numerous selections of music by the Odefflowas and Military Band of Belleville, who accompanied this lodge, we reached Picton, where the dock was crowded with an immense multitude awaiting the arrival of the visiting lodges. Headed by the Odefflowas Band the Shannonville brethren, escorted by the local lodge, marched through crowds of spectators to the market square. No. 99, Mohawk lodge, drove over to Picton and also received a hearty welcome on their arrival. Albert Lodge, No. 1375, went over to Picton on the steamer Ella Ross which was a good muster of the members of this lodge. They marched from the dock at the market square headed by the Citizens' Band of Deseronto they attracted general attention. Picton was crowded with visitors from all parts of the country, several thousand people having come into town. The numbers of Boulter Lodge, Picton, had made elaborate preparations for the event. Two handsome carriages, the street, bearing mottoes suitable for the occasion.

The grand procession came off at 2 p.m., and was witnessed all along the route by thousands of spectators. Wm. J. Jameson, of Boulter Lodge, Picton, acted as Marshall of the day and directed the procession in which over 300 men were in line. The band of honor was assigned to Albert Lodge, No. 1375, of Deseronto, Bro. S. H. Miller, Wm. M. Robert Pearson, D. M., J. Kitchen, Chaplain. They were headed by the Deseronto Citizens' Band which won hearty plaudits and golden opinions by its excellent music. They were followed by Lodge No. 2, Prentice Boys, of Amherst Island, Samuel Glenn, W. M., E. Scott, D. M., W. Preston, Chaplain, David McCaughy, Marshall, and L. O. L. No. 482, Amherst Island, Wm. Allen, W. M., John Brown, D. M., and 24 strong, and Rosemore Lodge, No. 1356, T. Irvine, W. M., John Belknap, D. M., W. Weese, Chap. 25 strong. Mohawk Lodge, No. 99, went over in a fine tug and drum band, came next, about 50 strong, and making a very creditable display. Wm. Maricle, W. M., Milo Brant, D. M., and they in turn were followed by Northport Lodge, No. 1013. Boulter Lodge, No. 488, Picton, led by the 16th Bat. Band came last. They made a good appearance under George Hadden, D. M., W. Boulter, Chaplain. Several leading Orangemen of the district, including E. J. McFaul, District Master, brought up the rear.

The procession marched through the principal streets and up the hill on the south side of the town to a shady grove where a platform had been erected and seats arranged. Bro. E. J. McFaul, District Master for Prince Edward, presided, and invited to the speakers platform, Bro. Wellington Boulter, of Amherst Island, W. M., S. Smith, D. M., H. Miller, W. M., and all other prominent members of the order present, together with the local clergymen, representatives of the press, etc. In a crisp, clear, and forceful manner, Boulter congratulated the order on the successful demonstration, Boulter Lodge, of Picton, for their admirable arrangements, and the people of Picton for their friendly assistance. He then proceeded to call upon the different speakers.

Samuel Smith, of Sophiasburg, first addressed the assembly. He stated that he had been for thirty nine years a member of the order which was not founded for pecuniary purposes. The society was willing to give equal rights to all. Prince William of Orange had gained civil and religious liberty for all Protestants and Catholics alike, for before his time both alike were persecuted. He despised Orangemen who were subservient to the color of the skin. Rev. Joseph Young, of Picton, followed in a pleasant and humorous speech. He referred to the appropriate mottoes on the arches and urged upon Orangemen the duty of being respectful to those of other faiths. He considered that Orangemen had still many rights to maintain. It has been thoroughly tested during the past nine years and its healing properties proved. The best of home remedies can be given. CARNAHAN'S CATHOLICON is mild, effective and a sure cure. Price ONE DOLLAR. It will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of price. The cases will be sent N. B.—All orders promptly attended to. A. T. CARNAHAN, Deseronto P. O.

had been 35 years an Orangeman. He would not support any man for the Dominion Parliament who would not stand upon the Equal Rights platform; he had supported Mr. Johnson in the late election on that ground alone. He did not believe that there was a more prosperous town in Canada than Picton. He thanked the various lodges for their kind attendance.

Remarks were made by several gentlemen and during the proceedings, the various bands played a number of excellent selections. The greatest harmony and good humour prevailed all day and the visitors all spoke in terms of high praise of the hospitality of the Picton Orangemen and citizens generally.

The Shannonville and Deseronto lodges headed by their fine bands marched in procession to the boats and returned home well satisfied with the day's demonstration.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Mohawk Lodge, No. 99, went to Picton on the 12th in vehicles crossed the Bay in the steamer Prince Edward. The members report the demonstration a great success.

Tennant John Mark, who occupies the old Isaac Pean farm, had a large ploughing bee on the 10th inst.

David MacLure, a young man whose parents live at the upper end of the Reserve, died Monday morning, of consumption. He was buried at Christ Church cemetery on Wednesday.

Captain Powles commenced to run his steamer Prince Edward on the 12th and apparently did a good business. Billy is popular, his craft is trusty and we predict for him a good summer's run.

VALDIMIR THE MONK

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

CHAPTER XI.

Half an hour had the gun-maker sat by the side of the sick man's bed, when he was aroused from the reverie into which he had fallen by the gentle opening of the door. He turned and beheld a human form emerging from the narrow, dark entryway. As he came into the room, the watcher started, for he beheld the humpbacked priest, Savatano.

"Who is here?" the arch fiend whispered, shading his eyes and trying to peer into the gloom.

"Ah," uttered Rurik. "The count is asleep."

By this time our hero had so far overcome the first emotion caused by the villain's entrance that he could be calm.

"And who is this?" the priest whispered, moving nearer to the bed. "Ha! The gun-maker?"

"Yes," replied the youth, watching every look and movement of the fellow closely.

"You are in a strange place, I should say," the priest whispered. Savatano, looking at the young man directly in the face, but casting upon him a sidelong glance, as though he dared not look direct.

"Speak not too loud, sir priest," said our hero, determined to enter into no conversation with the man if he could avoid it.

"Do not answer the count, for he is very ill," said the priest.

And then Rurik had another reason. He feared if Damonoff should awake, that the strange discovery they had made might be revealed; and of course he wished not that the villain should yet know how well he was understood.

"But why are you here?" pursued Savatano, who seemed determined to know. "I am this poor man's spiritual comforter, and I surely have a right to know wherefore in the presence of one bearing the peculiar relations towards him which are sustained by you."

Rurik's first impulse was one of disgust and wrath, but he managed to keep it to himself.

"Sir priest," he returned, moving his chair noiselessly nearer to the visitor, so that his whisper might not disturb the sleeper, "I heard that the count was dying, and I could not but have him die without first forgiving me for all that I have done."

"And has he done it?"

"He has."

"And why do you remain here? Where is his attendant?"

"She is out somewhere. The count has a strange fit—a starting spasm—and I feared if he had another the woman could not manage him alone."

"Ah," uttered Savatano. "A spasm?"

"Yes—a most strange one—as though something were at his heart—as though his brain were on fire, and his whole system shaking."

The priest turned his head away, but Rurik saw plainly the exultant look which rested there. There was no mistaking any more. That one look—for Rurik saw it—was proof enough.

"Well, well," the misshapen villain said, "I will call again when he is awake. I would not have him die, and I not by him."

Thus speaking Savatano arose and moved towards the door. His step was eager, and his every look betrayed some anxious purpose. He stopped as he reached the door and looked back, but he did not speak.

Rurik was afraid he might go to the sideboard to look at the medicine, but he did not.

He simply cast one more glance at the watcher, and then left the room.

In half an hour the surgeon returned. His face wore a clear, emphatic expression, and his movements were all quick and prompt, as though each one was for the purpose of announcing some self-evident decision.

"Well," he uttered, with a quickly drawn breath, "we have put the medicines to a test." And then he leaned back and looked into Rurik's face.

"And what did you find?" the young man asked.

"Just what we had expected. We have detected arsenic in three of the medicines which the count had taken; but this poison is not alone. There is much opium in the wine, even so that we could smell it when our suspicions guided us. The poison has been most skilfully mixed. The priest must have one of those receipts which have been used by scientific poisoners, for no physician in Moscow could have concocted the deadly potion."

"But wherein was it so wondrously peculiar?" asked Rurik, with interest.

"Why—in this arsenic was the principal poisoning agent, but that alone would produce symptoms which any physician would know at once. In this case there was something present which overcame all the outward signs of the poison, and only let it eat upon the vitals. I know not the secret, though I know that the villain must not know that we have discovered him. We will let the thing run for the present."

Kopani was not a little surprised when he found that the priest had been there during his absence, but before he could make any further remarks, the count awoke. He felt very faint, but that strange sickness of the stomach was lessened. The surgeon prepared some suitable diluents, and having called in the woman he gave directions that they should be given in large quantities; and also directed her to prepare some strong barley water for the patient to drink as he wanted beverage.

All the phials were replaced upon the sideboard, and then refilled with liquids somewhat like those they had before consumed; but the manner directed not to be taken. Everything that her patient was to take was to keep under her own charge in the kitchen; and she was also most particularly cautioned against allowing the priest to keep anything from her. But Kopani meant to be sure in that score. She had a little business to transact, and then he was coming back to spend the night himself by the count's side. He meant at all events, that the poisoner should have no more opportunity to exercise his diabolical science upon the sick nobleman. He presumed the Count that he should have a competent and watchful attendant.

It was fairly dark now, as Rurik could see by raising the curtain and looking out. He had no idea it was late. Time had passed without his notice. He moved to the side of the bed and took the invalid's hand.

"I must go now," he said, "but if you are willing, I will come again."

"You will come," uttered Conrad, in reply, retaining the grasp of the hand with all his feeble power. "Oh, you must come often now. I hope I shall live. Perhaps I shall. If I do, I shall owe my life to you."

And God knows—for the feeling is even now firm in my soul—that I will always remember the words you said to me, and I will never think, never, of the sad how you struck me. Come—come to me when you do, for now—now—as God lives I speak the truth—now I love you!"

"God bless and keep you," murmured Rurik, in a hasty, tremulous voice; and with these words, coming from the very depths of his soul, he turned away and left the room. He heard the voice of the count as he moved toward the open door, and thanked God 'twas a blessing which fell upon his ears.

Ah, those who know not what true forgiveness is, know not the holiest emotion of earth.

Rurik had left his ledge at a neighboring inn, and as soon as he gained the street he bent his steps that way. He had gone half the distance from the residence of the count to the inn, and was just upon the point of crossing the street, when he heard his name pronounced by one he beheld him. He stopped and looked around, and saw a man approaching him.

It was too dark to distinguish faces plainly, even at a usual conversational distance, yet Rurik was not long in concluding that the man who had thus called him was a stranger. He was a medium-sized man, and so closely enveloped in his bonnet and pelisse that his form and features would have been hidden even had it been lighter than it was.

"Did you speak to me?" asked the youth as the man came up.

"Yes, sir. Is your name Rurik Neval?"

"Then you are wanted a few moments at the residence of a lieutenant, named Orsa."

"Alaric Orsa?" asked Rurik.

"The same."

"But he does not live here in the Kremlin."

"He is here now, at any rate, and would see you."

"But you said he was at his residence," suggested our hero, who was fearful that some evil might be meant for him.

"I know to the contrary, sir," the stranger returned, promptly. "All I can say is, Alaric Orsa has fallen upon the ice, and hurt himself severely, and upon being informed that you were near by with a dog, he asked that you might be sent for."

"Been hurt, has he?"

"Yes, sir."

"Badly?"

"I believe no bones are broken, but he is so badly sprained that he cannot walk."

"Ah—then perhaps he wants me to carry him home?"

"I can't say as to that, sir. They only sent me to find you. I don't know the man myself."

There was something so frank in the statement thus made that Rurik believed it all honest, and he stood no longer in doubt.

"I will go," he said, "but lead the way quickly, for I have no time to waste."

"I will lead you, as you will want to follow," answered the man.

And thus speaking he turned back, and having gone some dozen rods by the way they had both come, he turned down a narrow street which led towards the river. Half-way down this he went, and then he turned again—this time to the left—and thus Rurik found himself in a narrow, dark lane, within which the snow was deep and almost untrodden.

"Look ye," cried the youth, stopping as he found himself over knees in snow, "I think we have gone about far enough in this direction."

"This is the shortest way," "I did not think the snow so deep here. But it's only in the next street."

"Then on you go."

Again the stranger started, and Rurik followed. The lane was a crooked one, and more than once the youth had another inclination to stop. He had no direct fear, but yet he had some just grounds for doubt. Had he not seen what had been attempted against the count, he might have had no such doubts now; but as it was, he thought that if one attempt had been made to ruin him through the Emperor's displeasure by the man who was now trying to murder the count, it would not be a small improbability that some more effective plan should be adopted towards him. He was pondering thus when they came to a cross lane, full as narrow as this, into which the guide turned.

"Look ye once more, sirrah," cried the youth, now stopping short. "Do you call this a street?"

"Yes, sir; and on this street we shall find the man we seek. It is only a short cut from where he is to the inn where your horse is; for you won't have to retrace these dubious ways. Only a little further, sir."

"But I don't like this."

"Why—bless you, sir; if you wish to go direct to the inn where your horse is, this will be the nearest way."

"Well—on you go."

And on they went again—now slipping on the ice—now in the snow to the knees—and anon stumbling along over frozen huddles and deep holes. At length the guide stopped and opened a small gate which was fixed in a high, thick brick wall. Rurik hesitated here again. He had no weapon of any kind, and he had seen a pistol, or a sword, he would have cared not. But he did not show his thoughts to his guide. The gate opened with a crack upon its frosty hinges, and by the side of the wall, the youth came to a halt. He looked out, and there still, a house of some kind loomed up.

"This place seems not to be used much," remarked Rurik, as he saw the snow in the court was trodden but little—only one or two tracks being visible from the gate to the house.

"Ah—yes you said—that?"

"I said this place didn't seem to be used much," the youth repeated, though he was sure the fellow knew the first time.

"Ah—yes—the usual entrance is the other way, by the sledge path."

"And where is that?" Rurik asked, not being able to see any such path.

"Oh—it's around on the other side."

By this time they had reached the door of the house which our hero could now see had an old, dilapidated appearance, and the guide pulled the iron knocker with zeal. Ere long a man made his appearance with a lantern in his hand.

"Ah—has the gun-maker come?" the latter asked.

"Yes," returned the guide.

"Well—I'm glad he's here, but I don't believe Orsa is fit to move," said the first speaker.

"And then turning to Rurik he said:

"But I'm glad you've come, sir, for the lieutenant wishes to see you very much. This way, sir."

This was all so frank and prompt that the young man began to think that he had been deceived. He followed the guide, and from there down a long flight of stairs into a basement. The lantern did not give much light, but it was sufficient to reveal the fact that the house was an old one, and not very large, for Rurik could see windows upon the opposite side of the hall which showed the light of day. As he reached the foot of the stairs he found himself upon a brick floor, and he saw that the walls were of stone. A little further on a door was opened, and this led to a small apartment within which was a fireplace, and a good fire burning.

"There, good sir," said a second guide, "if you will wait a few moments I will go and see how the lieutenant is."

As soon as Rurik was left alone he looked about him. The room was of moderate size for a small house, and the idea of inhabiting the cellars was a common one in Moscow during the winter season. The windows, two in number, were close up to the ceiling, and very small, and were patched with pieces of board in two or three places. The room was clean, and with him three others, one of whom the youth recognized as the individual who had conducted him to the house.

"Orsa will see you, sir," said he with the lantern.

Rurik arose to follow him, the other three men approaching the fire as though they were waiting for him. He had reached the door and passed through into the room beyond, when he thought he heard footsteps behind him. It was a sliding, shuffling sound, and he turned his head to see what it was. As he did so he received a blow which staggered him, and which would have felled an ordinary man to the floor. He staggered, but he did not fall, for he felt the blow fairly, but he received a second blow, heavier than the first, which brought him upon his knees. In an instant all four of the men were upon him, and he could see that they had ropes in their hands with which to bind him. With all his might he threw the fellow who held his right hand back against the wall, and another he sent in an opposite direction. He was a moment more he would have been upon his feet; but just at that instant a noise was suddenly slipped over his head, and as the rope tightened about his neck he was drawn back upon the brick floor again.

"Now resist any more, and we'll choke you as sure as fate," cried the man who held the lantern, and who now had a hold upon the youth's arm.

"Oh!" groaned Rurik; while the massive cords worked like cables in his arms and shoulders, "give me a fair chance. Let me be up and free—then look your doors, if you please."

"No, no, good sir," replied the ruffian, with a wicked smile. "We know your ways, and we are not disposed to test it further. We have had trouble enough already. Shall we—"

The man stopped speaking, for at that moment another noise was slipped down over Rurik's head, and he could avoid it, it had been drawn tightly about his arms, and having rolled him over upon his back, they proceeded to secure his arms behind him, which being done they bade him rise. Of course he could have no desire to lie there upon the cold bricks, and he got upon his feet. "Well, I will conduct you to your own apartment," said the leader of the gang.

"But wherefore is this?" the gun-maker gasped, rendered almost speechless by the mingled emotions of surprise and anger.

"Why have you done this?" the ruffian asked, with a wicked smile. "You say you are a honest man who has done no harm to any of us?"

"Never mind that now, sir," the ruffian coolly answered, "I suffice it for you to know that you are safe for the present."

"Well, I will tell me what this is for?" There is some hint.

"Yes—and come with me and you shall see. Come."

Thus speaking the man turned once more, and having picked up his lantern he moved on, the other three, taking Rurik by the arms, followed after. The prisoner made no resistance now, for he knew that it would be useless. At a short distance another flight of stairs was reached.

"Down here," uttered Rurik, with a shudder.

"Of course. You'd freeze up here."

These words struck harshly upon the young man's soul; for it meant that he was to be detained in this lone place.

At the bottom of these stairs they came to a vaulted passage, at the end of which was a door. The door was opened, and Rurik was led through into the place beyond. He cast his eyes quickly about, and he found himself in a narrow apartment, the walls and floor of which were of stone, and the roof of brick, the latter being arched. In one corner was a couch, and upon it was some old skins.

And here the youth was to be left. His guide simply pointed to the low couch, and then turned away. Rurik asked a question, but it was for some time before he could get the heavy door was closed upon him, and he was in total darkness. He sought the couch, and with a deep groan he sank down.

CHAPTER XII.

Rosalind Valdimir and Zenobie were together in their sitting-room, and the former had been weeping. She looked paler than when before, and her brow was heavy. Smiles no longer brightened the dimples of her cheeks, and eyes had a sad, mournful look. Her face plainly showed that she had suffered much.

"My dear mistress," urged the faithful Zenobie, throwing her arms about Rosalind's neck, and drawing her head upon her bosom, "weep no more. Oh, there must be some reason why God will not suffer such an unhappy work to be done."

"Ah, Zenobie," returned the fair maiden, in a fluttering, melancholy tone, "where can I look for hope?"

"I say, in God. You have told me we must look to Him, and I have believed you. Have you not always been true to God?"

"I have been as good as I knew how, though I have sinned."

"How sinned? Oh, my mistress, if you have sinned, then who is pure? Tell me."

"We all sin, Zenobie. It is our nature."

"So I have often heard, but I hardly think you have sinned. What have you done which you knew to be wrong?"

"Nothing—nothing."

"Then how have you sinned?"

"Ah, Zenobie, we all do things which we ought not to do; but yet I mean to do as near right as I can."

"Then leave the rest with God. Oh, when poor mortals do as near right as lies in their power, surely they may leave the rest without fear. And now, if God is just, as you tell me, why should He allow the wicked duke to triumph over you? What justice will there be in this?"

"He is all goodness, and he is sin itself!"

Rosalind was puzzled. She had tried to teach her attendant to love and honor God, and she had so far succeeded that Zenobie understood all the principles of Christianity, and embraced them gladly and joyfully; but now how should she make this point plain to herself, and to the rest of the household, in this apparent injustice with God's universal mercy and justice?

"Can you not tell me?" the young girl asked again. "Why should God allow such a thing? You say He is all-powerful, and can do what He wills."

"Zenobie," returned the maiden, after pondering for a while, "you do not look for a ray of light. God does not operate by petty, individual decisions, as an emperor does. He sees that certain laws are necessary for the good of mankind—and not a single law of all his code is there but is very good. Last night your head ached, and you suffered; and of course you had violated some natural law. It was your suffering, and if you feel this suffering which is now come upon me, is the result of a violation of one of God's laws."

"Ah," cried Zenobie, eagerly, "but you are the one who suffers, while another violates the law. In my case I did both, and do not complain."

"But listen," pursued Rosalind, with a brightening countenance, for the true idea had come to her mind. "It would not be just for a person to enjoy all the good of a law and leave others to suffer all the evil. God has established in us a social nature, and through that part of our nature come the sweetest of our earthly enjoyments—friendship, and love."

Such a law, the law of society—must be such that it shall be for the benefit of all. It must suffer, and the only way in which God could shield me from suffering would be to release me from the effects of the law. Then I should be a poor, lonesome outcast, forced to live all the days alone like a barren rock upon the top of some bleak mountain. But I am not a barren rock, and I have friends, and I enjoy the companionship of my fellows. I have accepted the boon, and now, when its evils come, I must suffer. Had God's intent been following, I should have been no suffering. Is it not His fault that the duke is so wicked?"

"Do you understand?"

"I don't now," murmured the young girl sadly.

"Excuse," resumed Rosalind, "you choose to peruse your social nature, and of your accord you mingle among your fellows. Do you not see that thus you are enjoying one of God's richest blessings—the blessing of society, friendship, and love?"

"Yes, yes."

"Well, so far God is good in having given you that power for such enjoyment?"

"Yes—I see."

"Well, now, under that law, when I found a friend in the duke and here have found a friend in you, but circumstances have changed. The duke has been wicked in thought—he wants more money—and he will prostitute a power which, in obedience of God's law would be good, to my ruin. Now God can take me out of the duke's power, and place me in a more powerful law, and one which is meant for a universal good. The moment He does that He destroys that principle of human dependence where flow those most holy virtues of love, friendship, and charity. He must cut me out of the duke's power, and I must be subject to the evils of treachery and social wickedness. Do you not understand now?"

"I would rather die," the girl cried, while a cold shudder ran through her frame.

"Then you see a death is not death. Oh, how blind and simple are those who imagine there can be pleasure in sin!"

This opened a new theme to Zenobie's mind, and she pondered upon it a long while. But by and by she came back to the theme from whence she had started; and in pursuance thereof she said:

"My mistress, are you sure the duke will persist in this?"

"Aye, Zenobie; I know he will." Rosalind answered, while the old shudder came back to her frame, and the old grief to her soul.

"And have you no hope?"

"Only one—in Rurik. He may help me."

"Oh, I hope he can. He is a noble man."

Rosalind answered with a look of gratitude, and Zenobie proceeded:

"Where is the tired lord more noble than he? Oh, were I to choose a husband now, and were I free, and I was in your position, I'd choose Rurik Neval before all the emperors of the world."

"So would I," returned the fair maiden.

"If I were a countess, as you are, oh, how I should love to make such a man a count."

"But my marrying him would not make him a count. Were he a count, and I like what he is now in station, his marrying me would give me the title; but my poor women do not have that power."

"Well, then, we should so much more have the right to choose our own husbands."

Rosalind made no oral answer, but his look showed that she sympathized with the sentiment.

"My mistress," at length spoke Zenobie again, this time in a low whisper, "why may we not leave this place?"

Rosalind started as though she had heard the speech of a spirit, and for a moment she looked upon her attendant with a gaze which quickly passed away.

"Alas! I wonder should we go?"

This was a part of the plan which Zenobie had not thought of; and ere she could make any reply one of the female domestics entered the apartment, and announced that a woman wished to see her young mistress. Rosalind asked who it was, but the maid could only tell her that it was a middle-aged woman, and of good-looking. The young countess bade Zenobie go down and conduct her up. Ere long afterwards the attendant returned with her came Claudia Neval. Rosalind had not seen the good woman for over a year, but she knew her at once, and starting up from her seat she bounded forward and embraced her warmly.

"Ah, Aunt Claudia, I am glad you have come. You will let me call you aunt, as I did in those happy times long gone by."

"Aye, sweet Rosalind," returned the widow, imprinting a warm kiss upon the fair brow.

The countess noticed the strange sadness of the woman's tone, and then for the first time, she also, noticed the sadness of her look.

"Aunt Claudia, you look sad," she said, while a child drew struck to her own heart.

"Aye," the widow uttered, as though she were afraid to venture the question she wished to ask. "I have been very sad, because I have had a terrible fear. Has—has—"

"When?" uttered the maiden, catching the whole fear now.

"Within these three days."

"Just then. Day before yesterday he was here in the forenoon."

"And I have not seen him since?" the poor woman groaned.

"Where is he?" Rurik asked. Oh, where? where?

"He said he was going to see the Count Damonoff when he left here, interposed Zenobie, who joined in the grief.

"Aye—so he told me," returned the mother. "I have been there, and they have not seen him since that evening."

The countess who attended the count went out to the inn where Rurik put up his horse, and the animal was still there, his owner having not called for him."

"Oh, God, have mercy!" ejaculated the young countess, in a paroxysm of grief.

"At this moment there came a rap upon the door, and Zenobie went to answer it."

It was the black monk, Valdimir, who thus demanded admittance. At any other time both Rosalind and Claudia might have been startled by the strange visit, but now they instinctively hailed his coming as a source of hope.

"Ladies," spoke the fat monk, approaching the spot where they stood, and bowing very low, "you will pardon this unseemly method of gaining admission here, but I had no other choice, for I feared the duke would refuse me if I applied to him. I have come to learn, if possible, where Rurik Neval is."

A widow tried to answer, but instead of speaking she burst into tears. Rosalind struggled a moment with the deep emotions that stirred within her, and she, too, fell to weeping. Zenobie was obliged to answer.

"Good father," said she, "was here, after the same looking. His poor mother has come here to try if she might find some clue to the noble youth; and thus did my mistress gain the first intelligence that he was gone. Pray, good sir, do you know anything about him? What have you heard?"

Both Claudia and the young countess now raised their heads, for they would hear what the monk could make.

THE TWELFTH AT ROSLIN.

The celebration of the 12th of July at Roslin was a great success. It was estimated that some 5,000 people were in the village during the day. At 12 o'clock, dinner was served by the ladies of the Presbyterian church in a grove about half a mile north of the village, the spread being a most tempting one. The proceeds from the dinner amounted to $600, which will be devoted to the erection of a new manse. At 1 p. m., a procession composed of Orangemen, Free Boys, and Blue Boys from various parts of the county, marched through the village to the grove, where speckmaking was the order of the day. There were also in the procession some 15 different lodges, whilst several bands of music were also in attendance. Arriving at the grounds shortly before 2 o'clock, speeches were delivered by the following gentlemen: Rev. R. McKinnon, Pastor of the Free Presbyterian church; Bro. R. Gordon, Reeve of Hungerford; Rev. M. Lambert, Rev. Bro. Rattray, Bro. John White, ex-M. P., Bro. Caldwell, Rev. W. H. Barnes, Grand Treasurer, and Mr. W. P. Hudson, M. P. Each speaker was attentively listened to by the large concourse of people, which was of an exceptionally orderly character. The proceedings terminated at an early hour, the day having been celebrated in a becoming manner by those interested.

HY COUGH.

When a few doses of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral will relieve you? Try it. Keep it in the house. You are liable to have a cough at any time, and no other remedy is so effective as this world-renowned preparation. No household with young children, should be without it. Scores of lives are saved every year by its timely use.

Amanda B. Jenner, Northampton, Mass., writes: "Common gratitude impels me to acknowledge the great benefit I have derived for my children from your excellent Cherry Pectoral. I had lost two dear children from croup and consumption, and had the greatest fear of losing my only remaining daughter and son, as they were delicate. Happily, I found that by giving them Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, our first symptoms of throat or lung trouble, they were cured, and from danger, and became robust, healthy children."

"In the winter of 1888 I took a bad cold, which, in spite of every known remedy, grew worse, so that the family physician considered me incurable, supposing me to be in consumption. At last I resorted to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, in a short time, the cure was complete. Since then I have never been troubled with hoarseness and bronchial irritation. After trying various medicines, without relief, I at last purchased a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. On taking my first dose I felt the effect of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—G. W. Youker, Boston.

Now that warm weather is coming on, we would call the attention of all householders to the great comfort and economy in using Gas Cooking Stoves.

Where gas is used for this purpose the price is largely reduced.

These Gas Stoves are made in All Sizes, and can be had from $2 and upwards.

All information and prices of stoves can be had at the office of the Gas Works.

THE RATHBON COMPANY.

Miss Allen and Miss Walsh, of Kingston, are the guests of Mr. Robert Mason, Mill street.

The Council last night voted $50 to the Mechanics' Institute and $50 to the Citizens' Band.

Rev. R. J. Craig has been in attendance this week at the meeting of the Grand Masonic Lodge of Ontario.

A large number of members of Deseronto Lodge, No. 102, I. O. O. F., will attend the grand celebration of the order in Kingston next week.

C. Essenden, B. A., of Napanee, has been appointed principal of the Peterborough College Institute. This is a serious loss to Napanee.

The unfortunate accident which befell Mrs.
Roach yesterday will probably result in the conviction of the parties who posted bills on the boardwalks. The Chief should run in a few of those parties who throw banana peel and other garbage on the streets.

Local Races.

The local races in the Driving Park attracted a good crowd. There were two entries, Mr. Gorow's black mare and G.
Stewart's bay mare, both drivers. There was a very nice race, Mr. Stewart's mare winning both mile heats.

Notice.

At a meeting of the town council held last night it was resolved to instruct Chief Gonyou to prevent all parties from sticking bills or posters on boardwalks, painted telegraph poles, etc., within the limits of the corporation.

Canadian Press Association.

The thirty-second annual meeting of the Canadian Press Association will be held in the Rossin House, Toronto, on Tuesday, Aug. 5th. The annual excursion this year will take place after the meeting, the route being from Toronto via Niagara Falls and Buffalo, to Clatskanie, N. Y.

Special Meeting.

A special meeting of the members of Albert Orange Lodge, No. 1375, will be held at 8 o'clock on the evening of Tuesday 29th inst. Worshipful E. Floody, special agent of the Orange Mutual Benefit Association will be present. It is hoped that there will be a full attendance of the members of the lodge.

The Weather.

The weather during the past week has been very warm and dry, though yesterday there was some rain but not sufficient to be of much benefit to the growing crop. Tuesday was the hottest day thus far in the season.

The maximum temperatures during the past week were as follows:—11th, 78.5; 12th, 84; 13th, 85; 14th, 89; 15th, 90.6; 16th, 85; 17th, 88.

Ellis Ross Excursions.

The excursions by the Ellis Ross are attracting large numbers of people from all ports on the bay. To-day she carries an excursion from Napanee to Belleville and return. On Saturday, 19th, she carries an excursion from Belleville to Napanee, calling at Deseronto, arriving at Napanee at 6 p.m.
and returning, leaving that town at 7 p.m.
Fare, only 25 cents.

Convalescence.

Fred Vanallen had one of his fingers crushed last week in the saw factory and yesterday, Wm. Parke, Jr., received a severe cut on one of his fingers from a knife in the same factory. Both were attended by Dr. Vandervoort. On Tuesday Mr. George Walker sustained a fracture of his hand badly lacerated in the same establishment. Dr.
Newton attended to his injuries.

Burglary at Rolin.

An attempt was made at 2 o'clock on Monday morning to blow open the safe of James Holbert at Thomaspark, but the burglars were surprised in the act and fled.
The tools left behind were stolen from Hudson's wagon shop. The thieves also broke open Mr. Holbert's safe at Rolin last night and secured nothing of value. The object of the raid was probably to get hold of $800 in Mr.
W. P. Hudson's charge, the proceeds of the Orange demonstration.

Headlines.

On Wednesday evening Chief Gonyou dispersed a gang of young rascals who were making night hideouts by their howls, and offending the ears of respectable citizens by their feebly profane and obscene language.
They were sitting on the high walk fronting Flower terrace with a large pile of beer from which they were drinking freely. It is with great reluctance that we refrain from giving names as they are the sons of respectable parents. Still, it might be asked, have their parents taken any pains to bring about a better state of things?

Serious Accident.

On Thursday morning, 17th inst., Mrs. T.
Roach, Jr., fell and broke her left leg above the ankle. It appears she was on her way to market and had reached the corner of Thomas and Centre streets on the other side of the street from Vallee's grocery, when she happened to step on a poster which had been pasted upon the boardwalk. The rain and softened the paper and paste so that it was as slippery as so much grease, and Mrs.
Roach slipped with the already mentioned result. Mr. Vallee's grocery is the only one on the street where she was carried into Mrs.
Breen's room. Dr. Newton was summoned and reduced the fracture after which she was removed home. Mrs. Roach had her arm broken by a fall only last winter.

Picnic.

The Sabbath School of the Methodist Church will hold its annual picnic on Wednesday next, 23rd inst., in Woodcock's grove, Fredericton, N. B., from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., returning at 5 and 5:45 p.m. The various committees have about perfected their arrangements, and there will be a very programme of sports and other amusement. A large number of prizes will be awarded to successful competitors. The silver cup, presented by Mr. G. E. Snider, was won last year by the time by Wm. Stuart, Jr., and is now his property. Messrs. A. A. Richardson, R. H. Baker and C. E. Hulse have, however, purchased a new silver cup, which will be suitably engraved, and will be presented to the successful competitor in the men's 300 yard race, on the same conditions as in former years. The picnic must prove a great success this year.

A GLIMPSE OF THE MOST FAMOUS WOMAN IN GREAT BRITAIN.

The Highest Mathematical Honors at Cam-than the Highest Man.

The greatest event in the history of woman's education is the recent triumph of Miss Fawcett at Cambridge. Probably no one ever entered a contest with more complete control of all her faculties and less nervous apprehension than did this woman, whose rivals were of the best, whose most formidable opponent was so distinguished a mathematician that a former senior wrangler on learning the result was heard to declare:
"I have known to Bessel she would have beaten him any year." In the achievement of so important a success Miss Fawcett possessed the advantages of inherited intellectual power from both parents, a habit of close attention to study, an object of the most thorough and advanced type, and, above all, a wonderful deliberation and de-terminedness of character and unflinching good judgment and common sense in her habits of study and living. She was not one of the foolish virgins who imagine that the study

VALDIMIR THE MONK.

BY STEPHEN CORN, JR.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Count Conrad Damonski was able to sit in a great wicker chair, playing with a favorite dog, while near him sat Stephen Uren. The young nobleman had gained rapidly since the visit of the Countess to the village. He had taken his place in the world, and he soon came back to the point he had reached before the administration of the prison.

"Stephen," he said, pushing his dog gently from him, "has anything been heard yet from Rurik Nevel?"

"Not that I know of," returned Uren.

"Oh, I wish I were able to assist in the search. But have you heard anything of what suspicious may be hatched?"

"Only that the humpbacked priest is looked upon as some having a hand in it."

"Ha—and how does suspicion point to ward him?"

"Why—in no direct way, I believe. I can not understand it. All I know is, he is suspected."

The Count pondered a few moments, and he thought he could see it. Uren did not know the secret of his friend's strange remarks, for that had been kept private; so he had no clue to the priest's true character, such as the Count had.

"I believe the fellow is a villain," Uren resumed. "He is surely a wicked-looking man."

"So he is," responded the Count.

"I never saw such a wicked look before in any human face."

"Ah," uttered a voice close by the door.

"Who comes in for the flattering remark, my friend?"

Both the Count and Stephen turned, and the humpbacked priest himself stood in their presence.

"Ha!" he uttered, as he uttered the position of the invalid. "Up by the Holy Virgin, you are recovering!"

"Ay," returned Conrad. "I am gaining fast now, as you may see."

The priest started hard with his feelings, and at length he managed to conceal the deep disappointment he felt. That is—his heart was broken, and he hid it from Stephen's eyes, but the Count knew him too well.

"You have not been very punctual of late, father," the latter said, also trying to conceal his real feelings.

"No-no," returned Savatano in a pained manner; "admit it, but the fact is, I have been called away. Let me—I have not been here since the evening on which I found a stranger sitting by your side while you were asleep."

"Who was the stranger?"

"I don't know. I think I never saw him before. He was a good-looking young man. Perhaps he was some relative of yours."

This downright falsehood—so bold and flagrant—astonished even the Count, for he knew the conversation which the priest had with Rurik on that occasion. And quick as lightning, too, went the thought to the sick man's mind that this was to hide the probability of his being suspected in connection with Rurik's disappearance.

"I thought you knew that man," the Count said, looking the priest sharply in the face.

"No, I may have seen him before, but I did not surely recognize him then. I asked him why he was here, but he would not answer me, and I gave him no tollance. Who was he, my son?"

The Count was at first inclined not to answer, but he thought better of it, and finally told the priest that it was Rurik Nevel. The villain seemed much surprised at this, and professed to wonder why the fellow should come to that place. Uren, who knew nothing of the falsehood which rated under all this questioning, went on and explained the nature of Rurik's mission, and its result. And thereupon Savatano expressed a wonderful degree of joy and gratification; and he presumed even to bless God that such a reconciliation had taken place.

"And now," the priest resumed, after this matter had been disposed of, "how happened this sudden change in your disease, my son? The doctors thought you dying when I was here last."

"Yes—I know," answered the Count, still hiding the deep disgust that moved within him; "but a new physician was called in, and he prescribed a new medicine. He said the medicine I had been taking was unsuited to my case, and so he gave me new. You can see the result."

"Yes—yes," was the reply; "and as you seem to have very good company I'll take my leave. I have several calls to make before night."

The Count made no reply to this, and as the priest found that he was not urged to remain he arose at once. He stopped twice before he reached the door, but in neither case did he speak. As soon as he gained the street he turned toward the upper part of the city, and he stopped not until he had reached the palace of the Duke of Tula.

The old porter admitted him without question, and he made his way at once to the hall where he inquired for the Duke. One of the servants went in search of his master, and when he returned he bade the priest follow him.

The Duke was in his private room, and as soon as the servant had withdrawn he bade his visitor take a seat.

"Now, Savatano, how is it?" he asked.

"Have you seen the Count?"

"Aye—I am from there now. By all that's a-laid, my lord, the villain is gaining."

"Gaining?" repeated Olga, with surprise. "But you assured me he was well-gone?"

"So he was—so he was. But he is recovering now."

"But how is it?"

"Why—he tells me he had a new physician, and that the old medicine was all demolished, and an entire new course prescribed."

"And under this new treatment he is recovering, eh?"

"Yes."

"Well—have you not taken some measures to fix this new medicine? By the gods, Savatano, you must not let him slip away."

"Ah, my lord, I have only told you how he caught the matter. I have another explanation."

"What is it, sir priest?"

"Why—they simply know that some one has attempted to poison the Count."

"Did they tell you anything?"

"No—there was no need. I know that the medicine he was taking before was the right kind of medicine, so far as it came from the hands of the surgeon. And then there is another thing: The Count must have had some powerful antidote on purpose for the poison."

"How do you know that?"

"Simply because he had not been here before he was taken. They knew they were sure, my lord, that they knew poison had been administered. They have discovered it in some way, and taken the most effective and speedy method to overcome it. I know this."

"And do you think they suspect you?" the Duke asked, with some show of uneasiness.

"I don't know, but I fear they do. However, that amounts to nothing—only to prevent me from working any further at the Duke's disposal. I have not said myself open to detection in any way. By heavens, 'tis too bad! In four-and-twenty hours more he would have been a dead man."

"Then you know when the discovery was made?"

"Yes—on the afternoon before Rurik Nevel was captured. I was there just before night, and the gun-maker was then there, and I noticed that the phials were gone from the table, though I gave no signs then of having noticed it. They had even then commenced some treatment for his cure, for I could see that the appearance of his skin had changed. You must not blame me."

"I do not, Savatano. But there may be some way left yet."

"Oh, yes; there are a hundred ways in which we can dispose of him. But I may find some way yet before he gets out."

"Look you, the Duke said after a short pondering over his own thoughts, 'You must watch every chance. Something may turn up in your favor. You may find some opportunity to finish him yet. I wish you could.'"

"I will do all I can be sure of that. I shall watch him closely. And now about the other one. Young Nevel is safe, and can be disposed of at any moment. I have let him live thus far, because I had no orders otherwise."

"Aye—that was right," replied Olga, and as he did so he arose and commenced to pace the room. The priest followed him with his eyes, but said nothing. At length the duke stopped and looked Savatano in the face.

"It would not be a difficult case to kill him," he uttered in a low whisper.

"Not at all. Nothing could be more easy."

"No possible way?"

"Listen!" spoke the humpback, as Olga hesitated. "I strongly suspect that this same gunmaker that led to the investigation of that medicine; and if it was him, then you will be more quickly suspected than I shall."

"Because he is a fellow of wondrous wit and intelligence, and can see without being told. He has had several conference here, and it was from here that he went direct to the Count's residence. He knows by this time why the duel was hatched up, and if he has half the mind I give him credit for, he will know that that is at the bottom of the poisoning business. I am sure of this."

"By heavens, you are right, Savatano. Let him die!"

"I had thought myself that would be the best way; for if he were at large you would not be safe."

"You can have him killed without noise or disturbance?"

"Think so?" replied the priest, with a wicked smile. "At all events, the noise would not hurt and so, for he is rather too far away from the world to make himself heard."

"Where is he?"

"Why—where you recommended: in the furthest vault beneath your old bathing-house; and that is a place where he cannot be readily found."

"And what disposition can you make of the body after the work is done?"

"Why—that is simple. It can be hidden in the old conduit. You know the conduit still exists there, and probably in some places between there and the river it is perfect; but near the building it is all in ruins. The body can be let in there in that stone can come from it in summer time even to those in the vault itself. So you see that is easy."

"Then let the work be done at once—say to-night."

"To-morrow night, my lord, will do as well, for I am engaged to-morrow."

"Very well—let it be to-morrow night. But mind—this is settled. There is no more question about this affair. When I see you again I trust you will have no reason to offer why Rurik Nevel has not been disposed of."

"You need have no fears on that head, my lord. You may consider that the gunmaker is dead."

"Right! So let it be."

And thus did the wicked duke dispose of Rurik Nevel!

As for Olga, she took a turn across the room, and when he stopped there was a dark cloud upon his brow.

"Savatano," he said, "there is one more man whom I at least would be assured is not in my way. I mean the old monk."

"I saw him this morning, my lord, and I am sure he is watching me. And he is not alone. He has others with him. I have been followed, and one of my men—the one who followed Nevel—told me, not two hours ago, that he knew his steps had been followed."

"And do you think this monk is at the bottom of it?" asked the Duke, with some uneasiness.

"I know it, for I have seen him when I know he was watching me."

"Then why have you not got him out of the way?"

"Ah," uttered the priest with a dubious shake of the head, "we cannot always do as we should. But he shall not live long—I can hold him off, and I think the opportunity may offer itself."

"He is a bold fellow. Why I found him only yesterday in my own palace—in the chamber of the Countess."

"And do you think you have disposed of him then?"

"Not well. It was in broad day, and people were about. But if I catch him here again my sword shall find his heart. I have given him my word warning. But," continued the duke, after some further thought, "he must be careful in your dealings with him. He may have some organized band always about him."

"I will be careful in no trap," returned the priest confidently. "He shall find that I can be as keen as he can. But it is very strange—"

"What is strange?" asked Olga, starting, for he, too, had been thinking of a very strange thing.

"Why—that this black monk should turn up here in Moscow so suddenly, and commence the first thing, to dog my footsteps, and hang about me, and so on."

"Aye," responded Olga. "And the same thought was in my mind when you spoke. But never mind—he shall not escape me if he presumes much more. By heavens, they shall know that the Duke of Tula is not to be trifled with. There is but one power in Moscow above mine, and that is the Emperor himself; and I may say that even he is not above me. I cannot get along without me. Does anything turn up to puzzle him he sends straightway for me."

"Then use your power for your own good, my lord."

"I will. Fear not me on that score."

"At this juncture the priest arose to take his leave.

"You have your instructions," said Olga.

"I remember them well, my lord—and they shall be carried out to the letter."

"And when done, let me know."

"I will, my lord."

And once more the mischievous priest was in the street, and the Duke was alone.

"Ah, my lord," muttered the priest to himself, as he walked thoughtfully along, "you may be a little too confident of your own power. I have known such things in Russia."

CHAPTER XIV.

Away back the old cathedral of Moscow, and in a narrow, dark court which was overlooked by the towers of the giant edifice, stood a lonely constructed stone building, which, though not connected bodily with the cathedral, yet seemed to belong to it. It was low and broad, with a flat, tiled roof, and without a visible window. Within one of the apartments of this building—an apartment away down in the bowels of the earth, where the light of day never came—were seated six men.

The room was fairly dark, and the floor, the walls, and the ceiling were of dark stone. Wooden benches were arranged about the place; and there were some other articles of furniture there—some strange contrivances they were, and fashioned after various shapes and patterns. But of that none the monk was lighted by a large hanging lamp, which had just passed enough to make the room gloomy and dismal. The six men, seated at a table, on which were a book and sword; and the most prominent man there was Valdimir the Monk!

And Valdimir alone exposed his face. All the rest wore black masks, their robes being of the same melancholy hue. They sat there silent as death, Valdimir gazing down upon the table, and the other five gazing fixedly upon him. They were stout men all of them, and they bore themselves towards Valdimir as bears a servant to his acknowledged master.

"The hour is waxing late," said Valdimir, at length looking up from the table. His voice sounded in the place like the echo of a tomb. It was low and hollow, and the others started as they heard it.

"There's time yet to spare, master," replied one who sat next the monk, "I trust we shall not be disappointed."

said Valdimir, at the expiration of a few moments more.

To this no answer was returned.

At length there came a dull echo from overhead, and the six dark sitters started up to listen. The sound grew louder, and soon it sent down into that dismal chamber the notes of coming footsteps. In a few moments more the heavy iron door cracked upon its hinges, and the other five gazing soon behind them came three more. Those who came in advance were two of them leading the third as a prisoner. And so it was with those behind. The iron door cracked again, and when the heavy bolts had been shoved into their sockets, the two prisoners were led forward.

"Master," spoke one of the new-comers, "we have brought the prisoners—two of them—as you commanded."

"It is well," said Valdimir. "Let them be brought before us!"

At the two men were brought where the light can strike upon their faces we see the two guides who conducted Rurik Nevel to his place of confinement. One of them was he who met Rurik in the street, and the other is the one who guided him into the old bathing-house where the torture was used. They shuddered fearfully as they passed around upon the dismal scene, and their looks plainly showed that they knew not why they had been brought thither.

"Lesko Totma!" pronounced Valdimir. "I know that you have seen Nevel within these three days. Did I know, as I have no doubt in the course I am about to pursue. Once more, where is Rurik Nevel?"

"I don't know."

"Will you tell me where you saw him last?"

"I haven't seen him since he fought the Duke of Tula."

"Beware!"

"I have not."

"Mark me; I have had you watched, and deeply, 'I am going to ask these questions again, and you will do well to answer them truthfully. Will you tell me where Rurik Nevel is?"

"I don't know."

"Will you tell me where you saw him last?"

"I haven't seen him since he fought the Duke of Tula."

"Then stand you here in front of me."

The fellow was moved up in front of the table, and stepped and laid himself out in struggling for the mastery over him, for he recognized now the strange monk about whom he had probably heard so much.

"Lesko Totma," said Valdimir, lowly and slowly, "you have been seen much in the company of a humpbacked priest named Savatano. You know such a priest, do you not?"

The man hesitated. He gazed furiously about him and trembled more than before, "Answer me?"

"Yes, sir, I know him."

"And now, sir, be sure that you answer me directly and truly. Do you know a young gun-maker, named Rurik Nevel?"

The fellow started with a perceptible quake as this question was asked, but he seemed to be prepared for it, for his answer was direct.

"No, sir; I do not."

"Ha—beware! I think well before you answer me."

"If you mean the man who fought the duel with the Count Damonski, then I have heard of him; but I do not know that I ever saw him."

"Then you are sure of this?"

"Of course I am."

"Frederick Viska!"

The second prisoner now came forward. He was a few years younger than his companion, though somewhat larger and more robust. He was dressed in the uniform of the apartment as Viska came forward. This, too, had been in the company of the Duke of Tula, and he had not seen the monk.

"I know him," the fellow replied, with a slight touch of defiance in his tone. He had not surely looked about him to see those strange contrivances by which he was surrounded, or he would not have ventured such an answer.

"And you have been some in his company?"

"Perhaps so."

"Very well. And now do you not also know Rurik Nevel?"

"I have seen him, too, sir."

"And now—can you tell me where he is at this present time?"

"No," was the answer short and quick.

"Beware! If you have any regard for your own welfare you will answer me truly. Where is Rurik Nevel?"

"I tell you I know nothing about him—nothing at all."

"And of this you are sure?"

"Who says that I assume to question me that I know you not?"

Viska spoke in a tone of just indignation, probably thinking that that turn might serve him.

"We will let you out of these cells by and by," the monk returned, with a peculiar shake of the head. "Where will I take you once more to the Duke of Tula where Nevel is?"

"No."

"You need not speak quite so loud. We hear easily."

"Then don't ask me impertinent questions," retorted the prisoner.

Valdimir started half-way up, and his features were clenched; but the quick flash passed from his face, and he sat back again.

"Look ye," he said, as soon as he was sure his anger would not manifest itself, "I am not sure that you know what I ask. I would not question you thus. And now, once more, I ask you: Will you give me some clue to the whereabouts of Rurik Nevel?"

"I'll answer you one more. I know nothing about him. You must not think that this dark place, and you men all lie as it might be a child."

At this point Valdimir turned to one of his men, and the fellow who helped bring the prisoners in, and said:

"You know this to be the man?"

"Yes, my master."

"And you have seen him in private confab with the humpbacked priest?"

"I have."

"And the other things you told me are true?"

"They are, master."

"Then let down those interpreters."

At this command two of the attendants moved to the back side of the room, where they unhooked a stout chain from the wall, and as they allowed it to slide through their hands a curious piece of machinery descended direct in front of the table. It consisted of a stout bar of iron, which was suspended parallel with the ceiling. Upon each end of this bar were straps of iron, armed with springs and screws. At a motion from the monk the prisoner was laid back till he stood directly beneath the bar, and then his arms were seized and raised up. He struggled some and cursed more, but he was soon overcome. The iron bands were passed around his wrists, and connected with these were two small cups which were slipped over the thumbs. After these had been firmly secured the chain was tightened, and the fellow's hands were raised far above his head. There were two results produced by tightening the chain. It not only tended to draw the thumbs back upon the wrists, but it also twisted the thumbs, the two cups being armed with file-like teeth within, and closing tightly upon the flesh.

"Now, sir, speak Valdimir, lowly and deeply, 'I am going to ask these questions again, and you will do well to answer them truthfully. Will you tell me where Rurik Nevel is?"

"I don't know."

"Will you tell me where you saw him last?"

"I haven't seen him since he fought the Duke of Tula."

"I have not."

"I don't know."

"Will you tell me where you saw him last?"

"I haven't seen him since he fought the Duke of Tula."

Valdimir made a motion to the two men who stood by the wall, and they gave a pull upon the chain.

"Oh—God!" gasped the prisoner, as the hand and wrist wrench came upon his thumb.

"Will you answer?"

"How can I? How can I?"

"If speaking what you know."

"Oh—nothing."

Another signal was made to the men at the chain, and they pulled again. Another groan from the prisoner, but no other response.

Another signal—and another pull.

"Mercy! I should think the poor wretch, quivering with pain."

"Will you answer?"

"I don't know."

"Then we must try again."

"No, no—oh, God, no more!"

"But you must answer."

"I don't know."

"Then you must have forgotten, and such treacherous memories need starting up."

As Valdimir thus spoke he waved his hand to the attendants.

"Oh! God have mercy! Save me! Save me!"

"Save yourself."

The wretch was in torment now without ceasing. Nearly the whole of his weight bore upon his wrists and thumbs, and the latter were drawn over almost to the wrist.

"He is not answering. He had a deeper fear than this. He feared to look the horrible out of which he was the scheming priest."

"One more pull upon the chain, and the man's feet were clear of the floor. His whole weight now bore upon his thumbs, and he groaned like the agony of torture. It was a few moments, but his convulsions could bear no more, and he fell back upon his knees.

"Oh, God! Down! down! Let me down!"

"But answer. Where is Rurik Nevel?"

"I—I don't know."

"Hold, then, false-hearted villain!" uttered Valdimir, in a voice of thunder. "This is the last of this torture; but when we take you from here we can put you into a state compared with which the pain you now experience is real joy! Each particular limb shall be wrunged all out of shape, and your very eyes shall start out like—"

"Down! down! Oh, great God, down!"

"Where is Rurik Nevel?"

"I tell you—I tell you I spare me!"

"Toll me first!"

There was a moment more of hesitation—single moment—and then the miserable wretch gave up.

"He is in the old bath-house."

"Ha! Where?"

"In the old bath near the river—the Tula pass—one of the vaults!"

"Very well. Let him down."

The chain was slackened up, and Frederick Viska was once more upon his feet. He trembled yet, for there was pain in his arms.

"Now carry him out," ordered Valdimir, "and bring the other one in!"

In a few moments more Lesko Totma was before the stone tribunal. He trembled, fearfully, for he had been where he could hear his companion's groans without hearing what he said.

"Lesko Totma," spoke the monk, in a low, deep tone. "We have given you time for thought, and mayhap you have your own way brightly by this time. Now, where is Rurik Nevel?"

"I don't know."

"Ah—You still forget, eh?"

"I never knew."

"A most strange forgetfulness, I must confess. Let the interpreters be adjusted!"

"Oh—mercy! Don't murder me!"

But no more was taken of his cries. The straps and conical caps were adjusted, and the chain drawn tight. At the first turn of the self-acting screw the fellow shrieked. It was not so much with present pain as with the fear of what was to come. The very prelude of the place, so dark and dismal, had more effect upon his mind than had upon his companion.

At a second pull of the chain he groaned and begged for mercy. He had heard of this dark place, and he fancied that men who came there seldom went away alive.

"Hark ye, base wretch," the monk said, "if you do not tell me where the young gun-maker is, you will learn him from limb! Another pull, there!"

As the wrench came again the villain fairly shouted with pain.

"Oh, let me go! Let me go! I'll tell all!"

"Then tell. You leave not this place alive until you have told me where Rurik Nevel is. He is—oh, God! He is—in the old bath!"</

An Interesting Find.
On Saturday last while enjoying an outing on the bay Messrs. Jas. Warren and W. E. Smith observed in the vicinity of Huff's dock what appeared to be a spiny goose duck attached to a twig. They secured their prize and Mr. Smith, who is an amateur naturalist of repute, discovered that it is a specimen of Arctostyris Maritima. It is alleged that this is the second specimen of the kind that has been found in fresh water though it is by no means uncommon on some parts of the sea coast. In 1871 it was discovered by Monsieur De Pimpe in a lake in the vicinity of Geneva. It has been a matter of some debate whether it is an insect growth or a vegetable formation.

They have increased the accommodation by the erection of several neat cottages. The view of Lake Ontario with its inviting breezes is here enjoyed in the most delightful manner. The sand hills are an object of unfeigned interest. As he watches the unstable and drifting sand, as it is so unusually quiet, he will be enabled to unravel several of the secrets of nature. The visitor becomes a child again as he finds himself irresistibly attracted to the sand. He will find the trip to the Banks will be found in every sense beneficial to the residents of towns and cities.

Latent Festival.

The latent festival held under the auspices of the young people of the Methodist congregation, notwithstanding the cool weather, proved a gratifying success and not only a thirty dollar for the proceeds in view. There was a large attendance and the grounds were well lighted with many Chinese lanterns, etc. The Citizens' Band furnished music. The sports and games afforded much amusement. The ladies sold ice-cream, cake and lemonade in vast quantities. The following persons constituted the committee of this successful festival: Misses Scott, Rogers, Hogg, Reynolds, Mrs. Wilke, and Messrs. J. M. Smith, Fred. Hull, McGrath and McCloskey.

High School Entrance Examinations.

Of the 112 candidates who wrote for high school entrance examinations at Belleville 60 were successful, and of the 18 who wrote second 8 were successful.
The failures were chiefly in arithmetic and grammar. Jennie Matthews heads the list with 549 marks; the first three on the list are pupils of Miss Truitt, of Belleville, who passed seventeen candidates.
It will be observed that Miss Jennie Mackie with 580 marks and Miss Stella Vandervoort 552, both of Deseronto public school, have the honor of leading in South Hastings this year. Both young ladies having acquitted themselves in a highly creditable manner. Among others we see in the Belleville list are: B. Robinson, Foxboro, 457; M. Hall, Shannonville, 451;
H. H. Walburn, Plainfield, 458; B.
Davenport, No. 4, Tyndinaga, 433; W.
Mcagher, 20 Tyndinaga, 413; Annie Mongie, 15 Tyndinaga, 405.

Terra Cotta Building Material.

A visit to the two houses now in course of erection on Maple Avenue by Messrs.
A. Leggett and S. Cronk shows the advantages of the use of fire proof porous terra cotta in the building of private residences.
Both houses are frame constructed, built of 24 inch studding, clappedboard on the outside and filled in on the inside with porous terra cotta new studding blocks.
Many advantages are derived from this terra cotta filling. The studding, by the interlacing of the porous terra cotta, is a cut off from fire. Such houses will undoubtedly prove warmer than an ordinary brick house, because there are two air spaces in the thickness throughout the whole wall. Then, again, no lathing is required, as the coats of plaster can be placed directly upon the terra cotta tiles.
It is not surprising to find that this material is now coming into general use, not only in the better class of business blocks, but in private residences as well.

COUNTY AFFAIRS.

Dr. Bell the venerable clerk of the county stated that he did not think there would be a special meeting of the council this year for the purpose of incorporating the village of Tweed. He said there would certainly be no opposition to incorporate next year and there was no necessity for hurry.

Where will they put the new members?

"That's a question" replied the happy doctor who has passed his eightieth year.

A requisition was also received from the public school board for $2,800 for expenses of the current year, $2,450 of which for salaries of teachers and $350 for school house appendages. In reference to the high school board requisition Councilman Richardson stated that he was agreeably disappointed that the board should be congratulated for keeping so close to the estimates. Napance completed to vote $6,000 more than originally deemed necessary.

The Mayor considered also that the High school board should be congratulated. They had been pain-taking and not foolishly extravagant. The building was a credit to the town and a source of pride to every resident. The school was proving a benefit to the town as it was educating the boys and girls of the public schools to increased exertions. The teachers were competent.

Both requisitions were adopted and ordered to be paid with the clerk.

On motion Councilman Geddis, seconded by Councilman Richardson, further consideration of the early closing by-law was deferred until the next meeting of Council, the Chief being again instructed to enforce compliance with the by-law in the meantime.

Council adjourned until August 21st.

THINNING FRUIT.

The horticulturist of the Missouri Experiment station has made some analyses of apples during the different periods of their growth, which show that much of the greater proportion of the ash is stored up in the early part of the growth of the fruit. This is urged as an additional reason for thinning as soon as the wormy and imperfect specimens of the fruit can be detected. A barrel of large perfect apples contains a smaller amount of mineral plant food from the soil than a barrel of small inferior fruit. The apples on an acre of ground which the trees stand thickly together and yield ten bushels of fruit to the tree, take from the soil more than forty-three pounds of potash. This suggests the use of ashes, or of the potash salts, as a dressing for orchards.

In reply to an inquiry concerning the fruit trees which are to be removed to remain, the editor of the Country Gentleman says—the distance will vary with the size of varieties, and with the intended uses. A large tree, for example, will require a large patch, should be four or five inches apart on the bearing branches, and small or early ones three or four inches; for while such diminutive pears as the Summer Doyenne need not be more than two or three inches apart, the Angouleme should be at least six inches. Plums may be rather less than pears, but the necessity of thinning is just as urgent, to save from rotting. Any orchardist who has observed the improved quality, as well as size of apples with a moderate crop, should thin accordingly. It should not be forgotten or overlooked that fruit properly thinned will bear a larger crop, and will be of a size, that no loss in the magnitude of the crop occurs, and a positive gain in quality and price is secured by thinning.

It is well known to every school boy that the first voyage accomplished what Columbus had attempted—reach Asia by a westward voyage from Europe—was Fernando Magellan, and that the first circumnavigation of the globe was accomplished by the remnant of Magellan's crew. Within the last few years, however, additional information has been obtained regarding this remarkable voyage, partly through the discovery in manuscript of some forgotten narratives written by the sailors, and partly through the results of recent observations of seamen and naturalists along the track of that bold navigator. Edward Everett Hale, in his Voyage Magazine for August, will relate the true story of "Magellan and the Pacific," as it appears in the light of the latest discoveries and new facts. Illustrations from old prints, and facsimiles of maps drawn by one of Magellan's crew, will lend additional interest to the narrative.
